ENOCH ARDEN.

TO EDWIN ADAMS.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER, BY OTTMAR H. ROTHACKER.

"We all before the row of evening lamps,
Each in his chair,
Forgetful of November's dusks and damps
And icy air."

A Cornish village on the coast,
The restless sea, the yellow sand,
The white waves breaking on the strand
And sailing back a routed host.

Bold Enoch Arden, brave and strong,
Sweet Annie Lee, so full of grace,
The banished lover's dead pale face,
And then the merry wedding song.

The seven happy years that pass,
The curse of poverty that falls,
And Duty's voice that sternly calls
The sailor from his English lass.

And then the weary, weary wait,
The visioned sign, "Beneath a palm,"
That fell on Annie's heart like balm,
But led her onward to her fate.

The merry wedding bells again,
That clearly, loudly up and down
Rang through the quaint old seaport town,
And told the marriage to all men.

Except to one, who, far away,
Kneeling upon the tropic sand,
Gazing beneath his trembling hand,
Looks for a sail from day to day.

The joy upon his bearded face,
The joy hid in his broken cries,
When far away his wearied eyes
The outlines of a ship can trace.

Then the return unto his rest.
The cruel tale, the heart-hopes crushed,
How well the broken sailor hushed
The burning secret in his breast.

The bitter end of all at last,
We watch the scene with bated breath,
The desolation of his death—
And now the tragedy hath passed.

Upon our cheeks the night wind blows,
Above our heads a half-moon gleams,
And we return to midnight dreams
Of tropic isles and Enoch's woes.

A LILY AND A ROSE;

OR,

THE SCHEMER AND HIS VICTIMS.

CHAPTER VI.

LIFE.

The fortune of Leonard Grantley, artist and gentleman had taken a turn. No longer was his studio untidy and uncared for, comfortable poverty had flown out of the window, and prosperity had come in at the door, with all the pomp of golden majesty. The small paned window had given place to one of stained glass, that poured many colored streams of light upon the changed room.

Curtains of lace and silk hung before the window, a thick carpet covered the once almost bare boards, the oak panellings were hidden behind a tapestry of crimson and grey, and the ricketty mahogany table had given place to an elegant one of sandlewood, carved and gilded. Upon the mantel-piece stood three china statuettes, and about the new luxurious room were grouped lay figures covered with satin and silks, and glistening with expensive armor and mock jewelry.

An air of luxury pervaded the whole apartment, and extended to the handsome owner, who was sitting at the table, sipping chocolate from a cup of Sevres, and carelessly turning over a number of dainty looking envelopes, with the directions scrawled in the pointed hand peculiar to the gentle sex.

Three months have passed since the soiree at Raymond Garton's, and the three months have brought fame and gold to the artist, who, for five years, toiled and strove, unrecognized and unrewarded.

Lady Macbeth had made his fortune. The picture was in every one's mouth, noble ladies and fair dames had viewed and gone into exstacies over it and the young artist.

Critics had pronounced it a wonder and a masterpiece, the great engraver of the day had copied it, the public, like the obedient sheep it is, had followed in the wake of the critics and bepraised it.

Every one of any note was anxious to possess a picture of his, however small, however insignificant, no matter so that it bore the scrawl, "Leonard Grantley," in the corner.

His dairymaids and children that were already in the market were sold at fabulous prices, and for the present Leonard Grantley was the only one true artist-idol the British public deigned to bow down before and worship.

Tossing them over carelessly, Leonard Grantley picked out an envelope longer than the others, with the initials L. G., stamped in blue and gold, on the back.

Eagerly breaking the seal he read the dainty note enclosed, a slight flush mounting to his white forehead and a pleased smile upon his lips. Let us look over his shoulder.

MY DEAR MR. GRANTLEY.—Why did you not come last night? It was too unkind to disappoint ("me," the writer had written, but scratched it out and subsituted "us" for it) us so. I waited so long for you that I got angry when I found you had not come. Will you have to-morrow? I have a few friends coming to see the concert you were speaking of, and wishes me to ask you if you will take us.

LILLIAN GARTON.

Twice, thrice, did Leonard Grantley read the note, written in a woman's hand, with a woman's irregularity of composition, with a woman's disregard of punctuation and capital letters.

Then, drawing pen, ink and paper towards him, he wrote his answer:—

A fit of industry kept me from you last evening. It was I who suffered; give me your pardon, not your censure. I shall be most happy and honored in acting as your escort to the Hanover Concert, and will call on you to-morrow.

LEONARD GRANTLEY.

Then he folded it carefully and enclosed it in an envelope, directed it, and with an expression of impatience, threw it on the fire.

"No! no!" he said, rising hastily and pacing the room—"no, Leonard Grantley, what have you to do with love, for love it must be if the net but touches you—no! What are you?—a young, struggling artist, the favorite only of an hour, that you should aspire to the hand, aye, and the heart of Lillian Garton—beauty and heiress!"

Then with a sudden change of countenance he stooped and picked up the dainty note, folding it in his clenched hand for a second, then hitting it to his lips, he murmured:—

"Do I love her already, already? it is too late to draw back; has the net caught me in its toils even now? Even now! No, no! I feel the danger but am free as yet, and I draw back while there is time and I have the power. Go!" he exclaimed, throwing the perfumed note in the blaze his own letter had made, "and with you perish all dreaming of Lillian Garton!"

Then he paced the room again for a few minutes, his crimson morocco-shod feet sinking into the soft pile, his hands clasped behind his back and his head sunk upon his breast.

"She is beautiful—very beautiful!" he murmured, presently stopping at the easel which stood in the corner of the room, and gazing at a woman's fair face smiling upon him from the canvas.

"Lovely! and—and she, she—seems kind, treats me gently—kindly. Oh, fool! fool!" he exclaimed, catching up a pencil from the table and filling it with color. "Fool, fool I work at her picture! Let her face be graven on your heart, hear the ringing of her voice, like the charmed singing of a Circe, echoing in your ears all night. Be with her, whisper to her, touch her hand and breathe the perfume of her hair and then say the net has not closed round you, fast and firm!"

"Lovely face," he continued, stepping back and gazing upon the picture with darkened eyes and heightened color. "I feel it is too late to draw back. Leonard Grantley, an artist, wedded to poverty, the last of a ruined race, loves thee—Lillian Garton—the beautiful heiress, whose white hand so many have wished to grasp! And why not?" he asked himself, almost defiantly, again throwing down the pencil.

"No! she shall love me as I love I her, welcome me as I welcome the sight of her beauty, be glad to hear my voice as I am enthralled by hers. Love me for myself or I—so witness heaven! love her for her sweet lovely self alone!"

The die was cast. Leonard Grantley's woe and happiness were tilting in the balances, his hand fell upon one—which?—and measured the future. With the slight flush upon his face that his earnest soliloquy had called up, his bright mass of waving hair, his fine forehead and his deep brown eyes flashing haughtily and yet tenderly, he looked handsome enough to win heiresses sufficient to fill a harem.

The sun far up in the heavens and blazing through the crimson curtains still found the artist at his easel. He was in the humor for work that morning and Lillian Garton's face grew beneath his hand rapidly and graciously.

He was doing it con amore. The perfect lips seemed to smile on him as they pouted upon the canvas, and the while hand holding the simple lily, scarcely any whiter, seemed endued with life and warmth and sensible of a caress as his deft brush produced it on the canvas.

Once or twice he paused and stepped back to view from a little distance his handiwork and each time he murmured:—

"Lovely, aye, lovely! but it lacks the loveliness of her sweet voice. Ah! if the lips would but open; if the hood of my love could call her forth from the canvas then would my Lillian live, and I be a second Pygmalion!"

As the clock was striking the hour of one there was a knock at the door.

"Come in," said Leonard, still painting, but turning round as the door opened. He had been caught once at guessing wide of his visitor, and a warning was never lost on Leonard. "Ah, Bolton," he said, as a short, thick man entered, a man with light hair and moustache, and no eyebrows, a long coat and a short pair of trousers, a glove on one hand and another swinging in his left.

He was Leonard's business man. In the time when his dairy maids and chubby children were not so eagerly sought for as they were now, Joseph Bolton, picture dealer, artist fosterer and general nondescript, had done Leonard some good service—and himself too—by disposing of them, and now that the young artist was on the high road to fame and fortune, he still stuck to the man who had known and helped him when he was climbing the rough part of the hill.

Joseph Bolton was rather a character in his way, as he had two mortal hatreds, the first for a woman, the second for a clergyman. It was little wonder that he was a bachelor, and scarcely what Mr. Spurgeon would call a "religious man."

He regarded a woman as a serpent and a tigress in human form, and any one with a "Rev." prefixed to his name something of a fool, but more of a knave.

With a sharp eye for a good picture, and a keen scent to aid him in finding it, Joseph Bolton was generally to be depended upon when you wanted a pretty little cabinet thing to hang in your lady's boudoir, or a piquante inviting panel for your own particular smoking room. Of the old masters he professed ignorance.

"I don't believe in Titian and Raphael. There isn't one maniac in society who professes to know them who wouldn't be sold by one of Dudley Moore's copies. I have seen a posse of your critics go raving mad over a Delaroche or a Reubens that was painted by Moore or one of his set three months ago, in Wardland street. As for your Madonnas and your Saint Joseph this, and St. John that, who cares for them? Give me one of Foster's—a country bit or a dairymaid—dairymaids are all the go now—or a 'First Sermon,' or something in that line, and I'll sell it for you, but if you've got dry old masters, give them to your mistress, or—The National Gallery."

He lived over some stables in South Audley street. A lad with a shock head of crimson hair, which had served as a model for many a rising and struggling artist—stood in place of a domestic, and saving an old jackdaw, was the only other tenant of Joseph Bolton's home.

The old jackdaw, by name Scratch, was as great a hater of woman as his master, and could lay no claims, like him, to being of a religious turn of mind.

Scratch had two bad habits. He stole everything he could conveniently or inconveniently carry, and he swore like a hunting parson.

Scratch, like his master, hated women; the sight of a petticoat, if he saw one from the window, ruffled his temper—and his feathers—for the rest of the day; and he invariably saluted the washerwoman who brought home Joseph Bolton's clean linen every Saturday morning with a shrill shriek, and the exclamation—"Oh my, you're a she devil!"

Between this woman-hating bird and woman-hating man, there existed some subtle sympathy. Scratch always knew of his master's coming some minutes before his heavy tread sounded on the stairs and never failed to welcome him with a solemn croak and a shrill oath.

There were not wanting those who said that the black jackdaw was something more than bird, and little less than devil; and Joseph Bolton's friends had remonstrated with him for keeping so uncanny and mischievous a bird; but for all Scratch's abusers he had the same chuckling laugh and the same answer.

"Scratch! God bless you, there's no harm in Scratch; it's only fun." And so Scratch was likely to remain the nuisance of Joseph Bolton's friends, and the conceit of his master, until either died.

"Still at work on that picture," growled the dealer, wiping the lining of his hat with a bright bird's eye handkerchief. "Still on that blessed picture, and the whole world yelling for more dairy maids like hungry bulls for haystacks. There's Lady Diana and the honorable Mr. Page, bullying me like methodist parsons, and, 'pon my soul, they won't believe much longer my assurances that you are working on their particular picture as hard as you can work!" and the little man transferred the wiping process from the lining of his hat to his face, and looked with an aggrieved air at the young artist, as he laughed a careless laugh and went on with his paintings.

"Never fear, Bolton," he answered, stepping back to view. "They shall have their dairy maids, all in good time, let me but finish this, and then for any number of pot-boilers you may command."

"Ah! so you all say, so you all say, wait until we have finished this, or that, this woman's head, or that Shakespearean tableau, and then—"

And Joseph Bolton ended by a significant pause.

Leonard laughed.

"Have you seen many women this morning, Bolton, that you are so hard in the grain? Come here and look at this stumbling block in the way of dairy maids and nursery pictures."

"Come here!" and he pointed to the half finished portrait on the easel.

The dealer rose and walked to the easel.

"A pretty face," he said, with reluctant admiration. "Portrait or fancy?" he asked.

"A portrait of Miss Garton."

Joseph Bolton, as he stood before the easel and asked the question, was rubbing the lining of his hat, as was his habit, with the aforementioned "bird's eye."

As Leonard answered he turned his back to the dealer and bent over his maulstick, perhaps to hide a slight flush that sprang to his face, and he lost the start of surprise, aye, almost horror, that the name produced, and heard only the crash of Mr. Bolton's hat as it fell with that peculiar sound which only falling hats give forth.

"Miss Garton, eh!" repeated Joseph Bolton, picking up his hat and toughing it up tenderly with his blue handkerchief, yet keeping his eyes fixed upon the back of the young artist. "Miss Garton, eh? Do—do you know her much?"

"So, so," replied Leonard, turning round and trying to speak indifferently. "Don't you know her? If I remember rightly, it was through you that I knew Raymond Garton."

"Through me?" echoed Bolton with astonishment, starting back and turning pale. "God forbid!"

"What do you mean?" retorted Leonard, coldly.

"Nothing, nothing," replied the dealer, hurriedly, wiping the perspiration from his face. "You astonished me by saying I introduced you, that's all."

Petrified with astonishment, Leonard stood, with his brush in his hand, staring at the agitated man.

"This is very strange," he said presently, in a puzzled voice. "Mr. Raymond Garton told me that you had mentioned a picture of mine to him; did you do so?"

"No," shouted Joseph Bolton. "No, Leonard Grantley, once and for all, no! Do you hear, when the future comes—comes ill, mind you—remember that Joseph Bolton had no hand in it."

His face, a deadly white, the perspiration pouring down his full, round face, and his hand clenching his hat, he laid his right hand upon the other's arm.

"Remember, I swear that this is a lie, so help me God! I would rather die than see you in the hands of Raymond Garton! I know him! Do you hear? I know him. He is a devil, and his fine place a trap and a snare, that will drag you down to hell! I have heard of this—this girl; she is but the bait—aye, a fine one, I've no doubt—a fine one, but a serpent for all that. Leonard Grantley, beware! beware!"

Then, as the last words of his hurried, almost incoherent warning rang through the room, he sank down into a chair and commenced rubbing, first the lining of his hat, and then his agitated face.

Standing still beside the lovely face gleaming from the easel, his face set and cold, but with an angry light burning in his eyes, Leonard seemed like a statue—lifeless, but breathing.

At the commencement of the strange declaration he had been astonished. The antipathy he had always felt for Raymond Garton rose strongly in his memory. The passion that rang in the agitated, broken words of the unromantic dealer, rang painfully in his ears, and he half believed that in Raymond Garton there was something to be dreaded, something to be guarded against, but when Joseph Bolton mentioned her name—Lillian Garton's—his feeling underwent a perfect revulsion. She dangerous—a toy! The man was mad; stark, raving mad! And he said unconsciously, he turned and looked at the lovely face by his side. Then his voice was hard and stern, as he said:—

"Joseph Bolton, are you mad? What do you know against Mr. Garton?"

No answer. Leonard waited a few minutes.

"If you know anything you must tell it; it is necessary after what you have just said. Who and what is he that I should fear and shun him? to me he seems a commonplace gentleman; you say he is otherwise. What is he? Do you hear?" he said, his voice harder and sterner, as he waited in vain for an answer.

The dealer was sitting still, brushing his hat, staring moodily at the floor, silent—stubbornly silent.

With a hasty movement, his eyes flashing, and his hand clenched, Leonard walked towards the door and flung it open.

"Joseph Bolton," he said, angrily, "you have spoken ill of a man I call my friend—of a lady I respect—spoken ill without giving me one jot or tittle of reason! There is the door. Go!"

Still silent, Joseph Bolton rose, rose slowly, and walked slowly towards the stalwart figure holding the open door, passed it without a word, crossed the threshold and descended the oaken stairs with the same slow step. Then he turned and looked up—looked up as if he would speak all he knew even then; but he caught only one glimpse of the angry face as the heavy door swung to and closed his lips.

Even so. Man's life hangs on a thread, man's fate hangs by a hair.

CHAPTER VII.

THE END SOMEWHAT.

Joseph Bolton had gone homewards with a lowered head and a heavy heart. He had something more than a mere liking for the handsome young artist whose progress he had watched and helped with a sort of paternal interest, and Leonard's hot words and angry looks, called forth by his involuntary warning, had cut Joseph Bolton to the quick.

"There, there," he muttered to himself with a sorrowful attempt at consolation. "He's young and headstrong, and I'm an old fool for blurting out my warning like a bull of Bashan. Why couldn't I take my time and say my say quietly! Poor lad, poor lad, he's half in the toils already—never so dangerous a pit as one a woman digs—and she's a pretty woman, too—cussed serpents all of 'em."

Then he scraped the mud off his boots with an accompanying shake of the head, as if to shake the subject from his mind at the same time, and toddled up stairs.

"Hallo! Tim," he shouted, looking round the tiny parlor and finding it empty. "Tim, Tim!" he repeated. "Where the devil has that boy got to? Oh, here you are," he exclaimed, as Tim the roundheaded lad entered the room, followed by a fluttering of wings and the form of Scratch.

Master Tim, a lad weighing about, one would say from his extreme leanness, from two to thirteen pounds, and possessing a face of a dirty hue and nondescript expression, stopped and regarded his visitor with a countenance upon which perplexity and mirth struggled for mastery.

"Look here, sir, here's a go, here's Scratch has been locked off with the key of the cupboard."

"What?" said Joseph Bolton, "what do you say, you young imp? Not the cellar cupboard!"

"Wot other cupboard is there?" replied the urchin, sullenly. "There'll be no dinner to-day becos the cold meat's locked up."

"I'll break that bird's neck some of these days," growled Joseph Bolton, complacently, without the slightest idea of carrying out his threat. "Why, Tim, he'll run away with you one of these days."

"So I think he will," assented Tim, eyeing the jackdaw as it perched on the mantel-shelf and cocked its head on one side with a knowing air. "He's the biggest thief as ever lived, and a big nuisance," the emphasis on big was something grand, and started Scratch off the mantel-shelf on a voyage of discovery into the pantry.

"What has he been doing now?" asked Mr. Bolton, drawing a chair to the fire and looking piteously at the closed cupboard and from thence to the little table nicely laid for dinner and waiting only the meat—he was hungry.

"You may well ask wot's he been a doin'," retorted Tim, throwing himself upon the hearthrug with a desperate recklessness. "I'll tell you wot, sir, he'll be the death of Mrs. Quipin. She declared to-day as how she'd never come nigh the place again. Oh! it was fun."

And Master Tim, overcome by the recollection, regained his feet and went through an elaborate break down, Joseph regarding him with a mingled look of admiration and wrath, and shouting to him to be quiet.

"Then then," he growled, as Tim dropped upon the floor again, "perhaps you'll tell me all about this now you've had your dance out."

"It aint no good a telling her," replied Tim. "You should a been here. She come up stairs a carrying the washin' basket, and coming up so careful, so as not to spill herself. I hears her a comin'," continued Tim, jumping up in a sudden ecstacy of delight at the remembrance—"oh, you should have seen, sir, you should, indeed!"

"Sit down, will you," growled Joseph, with a pleased smile and a snap of the finger at Scratch, who knew the signal and with a croak perched upon his master's shoulder and looked down upon Tim with an air of defiance; and so does Scratch, for he gives a sly croak—oh, he's a devil, he is—and hops from the table behind the door. Mrs. Quipin—hah! hah! hah!—she opens the door quietly and looks round the room, a holdin' the basket agin' her waist:—"Ho," she says, a lookin' at me.

"That there Scratch aint here, be aint, eh?"

"I manno," I says, a keepin' my hi on Scratch where he was a standin' on the top of the door. "I'm very glad of it," she says, "for he has frightened my life out; wot on hairth your master keeps such a hugly, wiolous beast for astonishes me. If I had him I'd wring his ——" she hadn't finished when Scratch shrieked out, "You're a devil, you are," and dops on to her bonnet. She drops the basket, all your clean clothes, sir, plump down upon the stairs, a shrieking murder and a calling for the police; and Scratch—hah, hah—he shrieked too, and, just to make the thing complete, as one may say, I give a shriek or two myself, so we were all a shrieking like mad when a bobby knocks at the door.

"I says to Mrs. Quipin:—"Git up, there's the perlice; then I goes down and opens the door.

"Wot is all this disturbance, young man?" said the bobby. I says, it ain't here, it's next door; it's Mr. Wilcox a beatin' of his wife, he's always at it. Then, when I see him a knocking next door I slams the door to and cuts up stairs agen.

"When you come, blow me if I didn't think it was the bobby agen."

Joseph Bolton tried to look serious, but the effort was too much, and a grin broke over his broad features as he stroked the jackdaw on his shoulder.

"Oh, Tim, Tim, you'll get me and Scratch into trouble some day, I know you will. And what has become of the shirts?"

"Here they are," said Tim, diving into a corner and producing a heap of tumbled linen, with a suppressed grin.

"That's a pretty state for clean things," said Bolton angrily.

"Well, they ain't got up so well as they might be," assented the lad, passing his dirty hand down the crumpled, but still clean front, by way of improvement.

"Take your paws off the front, you imp!" roared Bolton, "and find the key of the cupboard, I can't go without dinner."

"It's no use lookin' any more," retorted the 'imp.' "it's my belief he's swallowed it. Have you, Scratch?"

The bird looked at him in return, but vouchsafed no answer save an artful croak, whereupon Joseph Bolton started up and seized the poker.

"This is the third time we have had to ruin the lock since Christmas; it won't do, Tim, it won't do."

"Don't go a blaming me," replied the boy, "I didn't go and lose the key."

"There, there," said Bolton, forcing the lock, and taking a joint of meat and a loaf of bread from the cupboard, "Here's the meat, now then."

Tim placed the meat on the table and proceeded to take some spoons and forks from his coat pocket where they were always kept, it being the only place out of reach of the desperate Scratch.

"Where's the beer?"

"I give it to Mrs. Quipin," Tim answered.

"What, the whole pint?"

"Yes; the whole 'list," retorted the urchin, "it took all that to stop her a screamin'. And then I had to pour it down her throat, with her a screechin' all the time like a blind howl, and the beer running down her neck and over your shirts!"

"Go and get some more," said Bolton, throwing a shilling on the table, which Scratch immediately pounced upon and flew off with, followed by Tim, rushing and darting, shouting and yelling, overturning the chairs, and falling over the coal-scuttle, and creating such a din that a loud knocking at the door, then taking place, was not heard.

"Leave the bird alone!" roared Bolton, rapping the table with the end of his knife and thereby adding to the uproar in the room. "Will you leave the bird alone?" he repeated, "and go and fetch the beer."

"How can I," yelled Tim, "when Scratch has got the shilling?"

"Confound that bird!" growled Bolton, dropping into his chair again. "He'll bolt with the whole of Audley street in time. Here, for heaven's sake, let him alone. Take this shilling, here, and look alive!"

Tim took the shilling out of his master's hand, safely this time, and opened the door.

"Hallo!" he cried. "Here's a gentleman a waiting!"

Joseph Bolton rose, and saw a gentleman standing in the doorway.

"I beg your pardon, sir," he said, "there has been such a noise I did not hear you knock. Will you come in?"

The visitor stepped in and took off his hat.

"Mr. Bolton, I think?" he said.

"My name is Bolton, yes, Joseph Bolton."

"I thought so," said the stranger. "Can I have a few words with you privately?" he asked, glancing significantly at Tim, who still stood at the door, jug in hand, and open mouthed.

"Certainly; Tim, go and fetch the beer. Now, sir, take a seat."

"No, thanks," said the gentleman, walking to the fire, and stretching out one hand to warm it. "I won't detain you unnecessarily, Mr. Bolton, so commence my business at once. You have a client of the name of Leonard Grantley, I think?"

"Well—I had," replied Joseph Bolton, somewat sadly, the scene of the morning rising vividly before him.

"Had!" repeated the gentleman, raising his dark eyebrows somewhat questioningly.

"I understood from a friend only yesterday that you were selling Mr. Grantley's pictures for him."

"So I was, yesterday; but I'm afraid that I shall not be able to do so again. I and Mr. Grantley have—quarrelled."

It was scarcely the word to use, since the hard words had all been on one side, but Joseph thought of no better.

"Indeed!" said the stranger, with a frown of annoyance. "That is unfortunate for me—very. Now, do you think, Mr. Bolton, that there is any chance of a reconciliation?"

"I don't know," was the simple reply, still sadly.

"You seem sorry over the affair; may I ask is Mr. Grantley's friendship so valuable an acquisition?"

"Leonard Grantley is a gentleman whom any one might be proud to serve and claim as a friend," replied honest Joseph Bolton, with a slight flush. "I am not his friend, I am his—dealer—or was."

The stranger remained silent for a moment, still in the same attitude, with his eyes bent upon the floor.

"Do you know much of this young artist?" he asked presently, in a low voice.

"All that is to be known—and that's good," replied Bolton. "May I ask why—"

"For no harm," replied the stranger, shortly. "You may rest assured of that. Tell me all you know of him."

"It's all very little," said Joseph Bolton, eyeing the meat with a rueful air, and wondering whether it would be considered presumptuous if he asked his gentlemanly-looking visitor to partake of it so that he might eat himself, for be it remembered he was hungry.

"He has been in London for about five years, he is very poor, or rather was very poor, for now the wind has changed, and blows gold where it once blew copper, and very little of that. Everybody knows the Grantley family, he is the second son of Theodore Grantley, his brother was—what's the matter, are you ill, sir," broke off Joseph, staring at the stranger's face, which had suddenly paled and contracted as if with some inward agony.

"No—no," said the gentleman, hoarsely. "A sharp spasm only, pray go on—you—you need not touch upon the family; I know the history."

"Take a seat then, sir," said Joseph, eyeing the man's pale, yet noble face compassionately.

"Well, there's nothing more to tell," he continued. "He has worked hard for a long time, painting little bits of things—pot-boilers we call them—that have just fetched enough bread and butter to keep him going, until lately, when he got introduced—" here Joseph paused, and looked somewhat questioningly.

"Go on, sir," said the stranger, impatiently, resting his elbow on the table and propping his head on his hand.

"Of Miss Garton," answered Bolton, reluctantly, and looking curiously at his inquisitive and mysterious visitor.

"Miss Garton!" repeated the stranger to himself; then he rose and said calmly:—

"Do you think you could purchase that picture for me?"

Joseph Bolton shook his head.

"Impossible to say, it all depends upon what—"

"I will give anything he may ask, and more. You say that he is poor; that he lives from hand to mouth, and that were it not for this sudden sunshine he would be merely earning his daily bread."

"That is just as it is," replied Bolton; "and sometimes the sun doesn't always shine."

"True!" said the stranger. "Now listen. I wish—no matter for what reason—to purchase every scrap of painting Leonard Grantley may do from this day forth, but I wish to do it unknown. You say you are dismissed—you must become, by some means or other, reconciled and must as hitherto undertake the selling of his pictures. I give you the commission to buy everything you possibly can, and the price I leave you to fix. No matter how high the paintings are bid for, remember I still bid higher and must have it. You get, I think, a commission of 10 per cent. from the purchaser?"

Joseph Bolton, standing against the table balancing a table knife and staring at the cold, earnest face of the stranger, nodded his head.

"I will give you 20 per cent. for every picture you obtain for me. Are you satisfied?"

"I am more than satisfied, sir," answered the dealer, "but—"

"Throw no obstacles in the way," interrupted the gentleman, taking out his purse, "but do what I require of you. There is my card. Remember! the utmost secrecy; my name must never be mentioned. There is a check for a thousand pounds; use it as best you can, and when you want more my address is on that card."

And pointing to the slip of cardboard, the gentleman walked towards the door.

"But—but," commenced the bewildered dealer, looking first at the cheque, then at the card, and last at the cold face of his strange visitor. "But you forget that he has discharged me—I am no longer his dealer, I——"

He was stopped by the cold, calm smile that rose to the lips of the face before him.

"Am I wrong," came the cold voice, "in thinking that you have something more than a mere respect for this young artist? I fancied I read something like a tenderness for him in your face while you were speaking. You would serve him? Then do as I ask you, become reconciled with him and watch over him, for he will want guarding."

Joseph Bolton started. Another warning! but before he could reply, if he intended replying, the stranger, with a farewell nod, had gone.

Half an hour afterwards, he had stopped to finish a game of buttons with a friend in the next street, Tim returned with the beer and found his master seated before the fire, no longer hungry, holding a card in his hand upon which was printed:—

"Lord St. Aubyn, Richmond."

THE UNOBLIGING CRIMINAL.

E. M. FOX.

The trial was held, the verdict was given,
By the men that the jury comprised,
"To be hanged until dead, may his soul go to Heaven,"
And, though cruel, it no one surprised.

For he'd been a great thief for years in the past,
And the law a long time had belated,
But for murdering a man he was caught up at last,
Tried, convicted, and sentenced, as stated.

The town was ablaze, the excitement intense,
For a hanging had never been seen;
Every one was to go, the affair was immense,
'Twas to be held on the large village green.

The sheriff, alive to the theme of the day,
Ran hither and thither to find
Men to build up the gallows, and without delay,
But in the place there was none of the kind.

The day at last came for the culprit to swing,
But no gallows, as yet, had been made.
The sheriff was wild, for not one single thing
Could be done to erect one—no one knew the trade.

The sheriff just thinks, a most glorious "idea,"
"The prisoner's the man for the work,
He's a carpenter by trade and, I guess, for a fee
He'll put up the thing like a Turk."

So he quick to him goes and the story relates,
How no gallows as yet has been made,
And asks, most politely, what will be his rates
To work once again at his trade.

The culprit replies, he don't care for a job,
He thinks he'll quit work for a while.
The sheriff implores, wi' a sigh and a sob,
But he firmly declines, with a smile.

"Oh please, sir, just think of the crowd that's without,
They've waited now long that they've blue,
Now won't you, old boy, build it up—help me out!"
"No, sir, I'll be hanged if I do."

CHAPTER LII.

AT SEA.

At Billsford, Miss Pyecroft insisted upon Diana taking some refreshment before they proceeded upon their journey. Miss Pyecroft had made some miscalculation, or—as she would not admit that possibility—there must have been some change in the trains, which would throw them out, and which obliged them to stay longer at Billsford than she had expected; consequently, it was past nine o'clock the following morning before they reached Marchington.

Cold, raw, miserable. Diana shuddered as she looked from the windows of the carriage—everything seemed so dreary. They drove from the station to an hotel. Diana, restless and anxious, would have gone on at once to Bedford street; but Miss Pyecroft, having studied the letter, decided that the danger was not immediate—that John Carteret might be in a hopefully critical state—and that any sudden shock would be dangerous. So she delayed going for a time.

"I had better go first and prepare him and then return for you."

But to this Diana would not listen. She would not let Miss Pyecroft go without her.

"I will wait in the fly until you have explained," she said; "but I cannot stay here alone."

So they started; and, as they left the better streets, and turned into the less imposing ones, Diana's heart sank to think of where John Carteret—without one word of love from her—had been dwelling these two years, whilst she had revelled in luxury.

Bedford street!

John! John! Was he alive? She seemed to breathe with difficulty.

But Miss Pyecroft was a host in herself.

"How is Mr. Carteret to-day?" she inquired of the servant who opened the door.

"A little better, ma'am."

Miss Pyecroft turned to Diana with the welcome news. "Stay here, my dear," she added, "until I come for you."

So Miss Pyecroft, asking to see Miss Carteret, entered the house; and Diana nestled back into a corner of the fly, and took a survey of the humble residence in which John Carteret had lived, and from whence he had gone forth to his labors.

Perhaps for a moment she remembered what he had said to her about poverty, and felt how hard a thing it must be too bear; but the next instant she knew that she could have borne it cheerfully, willingly, thankfully with John Carteret; that she could, with him, have realized the great truth put forth by the Master, that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things that he possesses." When that truth is understood by man as a truth, and not merely as a sublime utterance, them, and not until then, is man a monarch, and the world a conquered country at his feet.

She peeped out cautiously, noting each belonging of the house, that seemed to her wealth-accustomed eyes all the poorer from the neat and respectable air of everything about it, which gave it a stamp of something higher, suggesting a sort of defiance of the humble means of the inhabitants, and planting a prouder standard above them. And, as she gazed thus furtively from her corner, wondering which room was occupied by John Carteret, there suddenly appeared at the lower window a white face, which looked out listlessly, and then vanished.

Diana shrank farther back. He must not see her. And she remained as one fascinated—her eyes steadily watching the window to see if the face appeared again. But it did not. Diana was in a dream. She sat motionless. She had seen John Carteret. She had uttered no cry. She had received no shock. Something had deadened all her faculties, and made her very quiet; and she neither seemed to hear nor see, though her eyes were strained after another glimpse of the vision.

It must be hours, she thought, since Miss Pyecroft had entered the house. How long it seemed! Perhaps his sister would not let her see him. The idea fastened upon her strongly. Perhaps their meeting might be prevented and she should have all the old pain to go through again. If she could only see him, only speak to him once. And she was so near. Would it be forbidden?

Her eye fell upon the street door, which was very slightly ajar. Perhaps if she had weighed her impulse she would not have acted upon it, but it took her by surprise. She opened the door of the fly, sprang out, and, gliding up the steps and into the passage, found herself with her hand upon the door of John Carteret's sitting-room.

The contact with the cold knob startled her, and she was drawing back when a feeble voice said:—

"Come in."

His voice! She hesitated no longer. She opened the door, and in another moment was at John Carteret's side.

"John!"

The color came into the pale face and then died away, as he gazed in wonder at the vision before him. Could it be real, or was it only a dream?

"Diana!"

She nestled closer to him. She threw her arms around him.

"John, John, it was not true—you do love me!"

But he did not answer. His head had fallen gently back and his eyes were closed.

"John!" she almost shrieked, "speak to me!"

For an awful thought oppressed her—the sudden shock might have been too much for him.

But it was only a momentary faintness that had come over him. He opened his eyes slowly and looked at her with the old look that she had thought of night and day.

"Di!" he said, wonderingly, "My own darling!"

"I have frightened you, John. I have come too suddenly. I ought to have let them tell you."

"It is over now," he said. "You must tell me some time how it all is. I only know that you are with me—that you are mine again—that it is all right forever and ever."

He drew her closely to him; and in one long kiss their hearts met and understood each other, never to misunderstand again.

Then there was a silence, but neither asked the other a single question. It was a long parting that had come between them. It was a an end now; it was but as a thunder cloud that had rolled over the heavens, to clear the way for a brighter, purer sunlight.

At rest. Even on earth there comes a rest at times, when the soul has struggled through doubts and difficulties, and, like the dove, has found the surging waters of the flood abated and a dry place made upon the earth—a place of blossom, where the olive yields her fruit, and over which the rainbow casts its glowing splendor. And in the divine stillness of the peaceful hush, a voice is whispering in the heart of peace and joy, and man seems for a moment nigh to Heaven.

Miss Pyecroft and Alice Carteret talked on, engrossed in explanations, that took longer than they were aware; and they were not yet fully through them when Miss Pyecroft suddenly exclaimed:—

"Dear me! I had quite forgotten. That poor girl is sitting waiting. Will you go and see if your brother is able to see her?"

And Miss Pyecroft went to tell Diana of the result of her interview.

Alice hastened to her brother.

"I know your errand already," he said, smiling at his sister's astonishment. "Di found her way to me without the help of any one."

Alice Carteret turned towards Diana, who had risen up at her entrance, and now stood facing her. And she became more and more astonished, for the face was quite familiar to her. Where had she seen it before? Then all at once she remembered the girl she had seen at Thale.

"We have met before," she said, as Diana's shy, appealing glance met hers.

"At Thale," answered Diana. "Can you forgive me?" she added, impulsively. "It was not quite my fault." And then her eyes dropped down, and she asked timidly:—"What must you think of me?"

Alice Carteret glanced for a moment at her brother, into whose face such sudden light had come, and then into Diana's beseeching eyes. But she made no reply. She stretched out her arms, and Diana was in a moment clasped to her heart. She had found a sister.

Miss Pyecroft looking in in search of Diana, withdrew hastily. A great sob—such as had not risen in the Pyecroft throat since the day of her father's funeral—choked the utterance of any speech with which she might have felt it her duty to improve the occasion. Therefore she retreated to the little back parlor, and, in spite of the dignity of the Pyecroft pedigree, the force of character on which she prided herself, and the innumerable proprieties which had surrounded her as moral and social chevaux de frise, Miss Pyecroft sat down and had a regular good cry.

And, what was singular, when she recovered herself she felt none the worse for it—indeed, rather the better. Possibly, too, Miss Pyecroft felt that, of all the missions she had undertaken in her life, this might not altogether be the most unsuccessful, and might be a crown twined of such grateful flowers that their fragrance would last and last into far distant days.

CHAPTER LIII.

THE "VITA NUOVA."

Winter fled by on snowy wings, bearing Diana farther into the "new life" which had begun for her on that Sunday when she had first seen John Carteret. Like the child Dante gazing on his Beatrice and gathering into his heart, through her, visions of fame, of glory, of beauty ineffable and of perfection to be striven after, so had Diana awakened to a longing after something higher awakened to a knowledge of herself, through the divine influence of soul on soul, until she came to echo the words of Dante and to say also:—

"——His alone
In this New Life which lives in me. He hath
A right to his own workmanship. What was
In me before his fair love infused a soul into me?"

There had been a wedding—a very quiet one, for the bridegroom was yet in feeble health, and the bride an orphan, without kith or kin. But a frank-hearted and fairing man had given the bride away, and settled upon the married ones a dower sufficient to meet their simple wants. The worty captain accounted himself a step-father to them now, through the approaching marriage of his son with the bridegroom's sister—for Charles Stanfield had fallen once more in love, this time to meet with a more successful issue; and Captain Stanfield was thoroughly satisfied with his choice.

Diana's wedding was perhaps a little hasty and premature; but it settled all difficulties—especially the important one as to home and guardianship.

Jasper Seaton had been persuaded to give his consent, through the last person he had ever thought would influence him. A circumstantial letter, written by Miss Pyecroft, which developed her knowledge and ignorance, moved him to make the best of what was ultimately inevitable, and had prevented his making his appearance at Marchington to claim

Hyde Park, Chicago.—The fastest recorded railroad time in this country is 14 miles in 11 minutes, by the locomotive Hamilton Day ... with six cars attached, on the N. Y. Central road, in 1855. In England, 18 miles in 13 minutes, by a special train, conveying the Duke of Wellington from Paddington to Slough.

E. H. R., Warren.—A man is "run out" in base ball when he is put out while a base is occupied and is touched while in such a position. 2. "Pitcher" is a high, long ball to outer field, which leaves the bat as it does a soda bottle. The Cleveland Prat is no relative of Although Mr. Tommy.

Actor.—Actors generally measure a part by lengths"—a length is forty-two lines as they are written or printed.

A. B. Cincinnati.—1. The Athletics had the best record up to July 31st, and still have. 2. The match was one of the championship series.

M. S., Dubuque.—O has an interest of $5 in the bet, or one half the gross amount.

C., New Orleans.—John C. Heenan's height is 6 feet 1¾ inches; Sayers stood 5 feet 8¾ inches.

Derrick, St. Louis.—The reason is that the club secretaries do not take the trouble to send us scores.

John W. R., Milwaukee.—Three copies of the Clipper, with postage, will cost you 36 cents.

F. H., Providence, R. I.—There having been an evident mis-deal, there was nothing to do but deal over again.

Costumer.—Apply at the stage door of the various theatres; ask for the costumer, and explain what you desire.

Sharper.—You say A makes high, low, and B low, jack, which is impossible. Repeat your question corrected.

Eccentric.—Your position and plan are not promising, and without further particulars we are unable to advise.

Miss Hattie.—Advertise your abilities, etc., in the Clipper, when perhaps acceptable offers will be made you.

J. H. L.—We do not know their address. Write to Peck & Snyder, 126 Nassau street, and it will be forwarded.

A. M. R., Sunbury.—Two clubs playing for the championship of one county can only play residents of that county.

Tom Gumby.—1. See answer to Van, Boston. 2. Yes, he can stand anywhere, so that he does not interfere with the striker.

Chas. K., Corry, Pa.—You neglect to mention distance. See reply to "Blair Athol."

W. Johnson, Providence.—Salina's 1.43 is the best mile time on record. See answer to "Blair Athol."

L. E. S., Boston, Mass.—We can furnish you with a copy dated June 3d.

Jeremiah Jenkins.—Respectfully declined. Send address, and it will be returned.

Jubal, Louisville, Ky.—The match creates no interest whatever in this direction, many doubting that it is genuine.

S. P. T., Salem, N. J.—Your favor came up from the dealer out. When made in play, Jack does not count until after high and low.

G. L. M., Providence.—We shall not have room for it for some time.

Noticus.—Address a letter to the secretary of the N. Y. Yacht Club, Charles A. Minton, 26 Broad street, this city.

Patterson.—Jack Howard made the longest running jump on record at Cooper's Corner, Eng., viz.—20 ft. 7½ in.

L. J. B., Hamilton, O.—One of them will be used as soon as space can be found.

H. A. D., Brooklyn.—We will look them over and, if suitable, give them a place.

C. S.—The Empire City Rink changes hands so often that we cannot keep track of its managers.

A. F. G., Eau Claire, Wis.—Apply in person to some minstrel manager.

M. B., Vicksburg, Miss.—"Sugar Bob" is the private property of Walter Bray.

Old Reader.—It was W. G. Jones who played there. He was quite famous for his delineation of sailor characters.

Tyson, Philadelphia.—Cannot say positively, but do not think they did.

C. L., Tre largest run ever made in a public match at billiards is 3,685.

Y. H. G., Peter F. and Lafayette.—As you neglected to mention dates we cannot insert the items sent.

Sitpa, Louisville, Ky.—As 44 was not beaten, but only tied, the game must be played it would be, toward, or over, 45.

Owen McL.—If you desire such a challenge inserted, you must put up money to show that you mean what you say.

R. H. V., Little Rock, Ark.—We have no faith in such things. It is pretty safe to bet the odd one, as a series rarely runs to the full.

Red Side.—Not seeing the match, we cannot answer your query.

Unknown.—B was entitled to two points for "thirty-one" only.

R. Gilligan.—Call upon Ed. James, 88 and 90 Centre street

E. D. Albion, N. Y.—Address him, in care of this office.

J. C. F.—1. Yes, one season. 2. Yes, the same year.

A. H. T., Manch Chunk, Pa.—For two times. $3.80.

N. E. L., Detroit.—We do not know of any remedy.

W. J. G., Philadelphia.—Mention the distance.

S. Santram.—Nine dollars and ninety cents.

F. J. H.—Address him, in care of this office.

Adeline Fontainebleau.—Three dollars.

Boy Jumper, Olean.—Not upon record.

Trespass.—A wins, of course.

Reliefet.—No.

Too Impatient.—People are making a great outcry because our new court house has not been completed in eight or ten years, and viciously intimate that somebody is making fabulous sums of money by nursing this job. Our people are entirely too fast; they want everything done in such a hurry. Now, let us glance back at ancient times, and we shall find that, with 180,000 men, it took Solomon seven years and a half to build the temple of Jerusalem. Now give our contractors 180,000 men to do their work, and they will "lay over" Solomon's great undertaking every time. We are too impatient, entirely. Solomon would be a hundred years building our new post office if he had no more men than the corporal's guard now doing duty around that contemplated structure, while we calculate on seeing it completed before the close of the present century, if Congress doesn't stop the supplies.

"Syndicate."—We are indebted to our European brethren for putting on the market this word and the new United States loan at the same time. It is quite likely that it will be generally accepted in this country, and will be included in the same class with "impecunious," "shoddyite," and such like. From the London Saturday the last adverb definite a favorable reception for the new loan.

ENGLISH ACTORS IN AMERICA.

[illegible] coming over [illegible] from the United States during the very height of the Alabama excitement, and who [illegible] to the Queen's Theatre, London, in the part of Leonard, London, Eng., of Aug. 6th.

We would like to ask [illegible] the names of some of these English actors who make the above statement? Let us in refutation take a summary glance at the situation. Mr. William Cromwick, an English actor of repute, arrived [illegible] here some three since, while every theatre of standing was [illegible] engaged that it was impossible to obtain an opening. A short [illegible] time after he appeared at the Fourteenth Street Theatre, with [illegible] Miss Laura Keene, in the "Lost Child," and met with favor both [illegible] from the press and public. Owing to the bad location of the theatre [illegible] the enterprising management, the season was brief. At the present writing it is given out that he has been engaged to play [illegible] Miss Charlotte Cushman at Booth's Theatre, during her forthcoming engagement, when he will have an opportunity to set character before worthy of his reputation. Dominick Murray likes the country so well that he has decided to remain here. Charles Fechter is also well pleased that he has purchased the Fourteenth Street Theatre above referred to, and is about to entirely reconstruct it, and under his management it bids fair to succeed. Walter Montgomery, now lasting at the Gaiety Theatre, London, Eng., on the occasion of his first appearance at Nottingham, since his Australian and American tour, took occasion, in the course of a speech to state that America and Australia were the only countries where an actor playing the "higher drama" could find lucrative employment, and in another speech, delivered elsewhere, he stated that he was about to leave England to return to the United States, and that he would probably never return to England. Other artists, who, though not playing the higher drama, have won both fame and fortune in this country, still prefer to remain here. Among these we may refer to is Miss Lydia Thompson, who has just returned from England, with nearly an entire new burlesque company; W. Horace Lingard and his company find considerable employment; Miss Eliza Weathersby, formerly with Miss Lydia Thompson, has already sailed from England for America; Miss Edith Challis finds engagements numerous; Miss Louisa Moore was favorably received during her two visits, and should she care to return, will be heartily welcomed. Mr. Charles Wyndham, season before last, tried as an experiment a western tour with a company playing comedies, and was so successful that he brought from England an entire dramatic company, and during the past season met with much success, playing Robertson's comedies, and for the approaching season he has some forty weeks of time filled upon such terms that he must make money. We grant that some few performers have come to our shores and been most hospitably received, but, finding upon trial we had better talent among our native or established foreign artists, we had no need for their services. Imbibing the principles of our government, which is ever ready to offer a shelter for the oppressed of all nations, our managers are always ready to give any artist of repute a fair hearing, and after that he must stand or fall according to the talent he possesses. But foreign artists must not expect to come here in the middle of a season and find employment. The season here commences about the 1st of September and lasts until about June 1st. All provincial managers visit New York during the summer months to make their engagements, both stock and star, for the ensuing season, and all these are generally closed by the middle of August, if not earlier. Taking a furtive glance at the musical profession we find that M'lle Nilsson is so well pleased with her success in this country that she prefers remaining here, notwithstanding tempting offers were made to induce her to return to London during the past season. It is time that these attempts to stir up hostile feelings among artists upon the score of nationality ceased. Art knows no clime, no language; it is universal.

The Mayor of Cape May and the News Dealers.—There was quite a good breeze raised lately at Cape May, caused by Mayor Ware's attempt to stop the sale of New York and Philadelphia papers on the island. As the Mayor failed in his designs against the news dealers, we have concluded to immortalize him in verse, for the benefit of all concerned:—

Oh, Mayor Ware, pray let us know
The meaning of your capers,
Your most unwise attempts to stop
The sale of New York papers?
Surely you cannot be a-ware
How much you hurt yourself,
Be-ware, lest when your time is out
You be laid on the shelf.
We can't see where your wits have gone,
That you are so un-aware-y,
For you to your own interests
Are perfectly contrary.
Your prestige you have damaged much,
So, Mayor, have a care,
Or, in the people's estimate,
You soon will be no-where.

The Theatres are gradually opening for the fall campaign, here and elsewhere, and the music halls and minstrel establishments are likewise falling in. September will witness the re-commencement of operations along the whole line, when the festive season will be brilliant with big events, and the metropolis will again assume its wonted gaiety. The churches, too, are about resuming their services, when the butterflies of fashion will have the opportunity afforded them of basking in the sunshine of piety, under the droppings of the pulpit. Lively times ahead.

A Good Move.—Detectives, in citizens' dress, are, hereafter, to move in a mysterious way among our city railway cars, in order to protect passengers from the assaults of the drunken brutes who of late have had things pretty much their own way. We are evidently making progress toward a system of law and order.

That Pin—which was carelessly dropped in the loom by a female operative at Lawrence, Mass., thereby spoiling 700 yards of cloth—has fairly started on its rounds. By the time it gets to California we expect to see the pin turned into a big spike, with the mill and its entire contents destroyed.

Fish shooting is the latest Wisconsin sport. We read of a Fon du Lac "fisherman" who lately "brought down" 195 pickerel in two days. But we enter our protest against this kind of fishing; it is taking a mean advantage of the finny tribe, and is a scaly piece of business at the best

The Model Moral railroad conductor is claimed by New Jersey; it is said that he neither chews, smokes, drinks, nor swears. "Our Jim," who is always trying to pick flaws in other people's characters, says he'll bet a horse to a hen that the Jersey-man "knocks down."

The Surrey Theatre, London, we are told, is about to be converted into a place of worship by the congregation of Newman Hall. Now, if the Saloons of the Surrey could be converted at the same time, it would be a new man hall in earnest.

"Our Jim," in reading about the new U. S. five per cent. loan, says "the singe cats" seem to be doing lively work with their "bunch of fives."

Peaches remind us very much of castor oil this summer, because they are a "drug in the market."

Running Expenses—the cost of training a pedestrian.

NEWS OF THE WEEK BOILED DOWN.

☞ The coroner's inquest in the Westfield ferryboat explosion case was concluded in this city on Aug 16th, and the jury rendered a verdict in which they declare that the officials of the Staten Island Ferry Company are guilty of criminal negligence. The case will go before the grand jury.

☞ A deputation of French citizens appointed to visit Ireland and thank the people of that country for their aid to the wounded French soldiers during the war with Prussia, has arrived, we are informed by a telegram dated Aug. 16th. Their reception was most enthusiastic.

☞ Advices from Japan, via San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 14th, state that the country was quiet and that the government was making immense improvements, deepening the canals, building railroads, &c. A typhoon had done great damage at Kobe, and about 400 lives were lost.

☞ Twelve convicts escaped from the State Prison at Sing Sing, N. Y., on Aug. 17th, on board the steam tug Dan Richmond and a canal boat in tow, which, it is supposed, were chartered for that purpose by friends of the prisoners in this city. Several of them have since been recaptured.

☞ It has been decided that the French Assembly is to remain at Versailles, but certain of the government offices are to be removed to Paris.

☞ H. T. Helmbold, the celebrated druggist of this city, committed suicide by shooting himself at Long Branch, N. J., on Aug. 21st, it is stated.

☞ The steam tug G. H. Starbuck burst her boiler near the ferry landing of New Brighton, N. Y., on Aug. 18th. Williams, a colored man, was killed, but the other persons on board escaped unhurt.

☞ The United States inspector declares, in his official report, that the explosion on board the Westfield was the result of a wilful violation of the law.

☞ The negro who outraged and murdered a little girl near Fulton Station, Hickman county, Ky., was taken from the jail by a party of citizens a few days ago and lynched.

☞ Frank Heidlauf, Thomas Gantz, and Henry Cooke, were killed, and fourteen persons injured, several of whom will probably die.

☞ An explosion of fire-damp occurred at the Eagle shaft, near Pittston, Pa., on Aug. 14th, by which the roof of the mine was thrown away and eighteen men entombed and suffocated.

☞ An agricultural convention is to be held at Chicago, Ill., on Aug. 24th, at which it is expected the principal professors of agriculture of the United States and British Provinces will be present.

☞ A drover, named J. Thompson, was found murdered near Springfield, Mo., on Aug. 14th, it is supposed by one of his employes named Webster, who also robbed him.

☞ A London, Eng., telegraph dated August 14th, states that the island of Tongananda, in the Malay Archipelago, has been devastated by a volcanic irruption and a tidal wave, which swept all the human beings, cattle and horses off the island; 416 persons perished.

BASE BALL.

ROCKFORD vs. MUTUAL.

A CLOSE CONTEST.

The Rockford club played the fourth game of their championship series with the Mutual club on August 21st, on the Clintonville grounds, L. I., in the presence of about 800 spectators only, the poor play of the Mutuals being the cause of the small attendance. The Rockfords having learned the interest manifested in their last game, turned out their full strength, and were bent upon victory if it was possible. The Mutuals, on the contrary, were on hand in full strength, and the two clubs had an exciting contest for the championship, the following is the record of the Rockford beat up to the close of the season:

Rockford vs. Eastmans.....6 0
Rockford vs. White Stockings.....10 7
Rockford vs. Cleveland.....10 7
Rockford vs. Athletic, of Canada.....10 6
Rockford vs. Athletic, of Detroit.....10 6
Rockford vs. Maple Leaf, of Guelph.....10 6
Rockford vs. Maple Leaf, of Hamilton.....10 6
Rockford vs. Maple City, of Ogdensburgh.....10 6
Rockford vs. Custom House, of Oswego.....10 6
Rockford vs. Boston.....10 6
Rockford vs. Mutual.....7 11
Rockford vs. Natual.....5 6

THE GAME.

Play was called at 2.35 P. M., with the Rockfords at the bat. By a safe hit by Hatfield and a base earned, the next three retiring to the field in quick order. Before the first man went out, however, Ed. Hatfield had scored. In the second inning the Rockfords were blanked, but in their respective positions Hatfield, Higham and Ferguson in their half scored his run by sharp base running, the latter only reaching first through Addy's muff of a fly ball. In the third inning the first three men were very handsomely put out, a double play by Fisher, Addy and Higham being noteworthy.

In the second inning the Rockfords were very chary for outs, and were put out in succession, Stires hitting one. On the other side Start opened with a ball to Addy, who got only muffed a fly ball, but threw it by which he and the result was Wolters reached his second. Kelley then struck out, and after getting his third on a passed ball, Wolters came in on Mills' out, the latter also being retired. By another of Addy's parrots Ferguson had a life given him at first, but the error was compensated for by the way Addy handled the ball on Ferguson's attempt at second from Hastings' skinny throw, the innings closing for a single run not earned.

Palmer led off in the third innings with a long ball, which Kepler held prettily, after which Hatfield struck out; Hall being third out by Ferguson's throw to Start. On the other side Higham opened with a ball to third, which Anson could have easily fielded, but Fisher was out for it, and muffing it, Higham reached his base. Force then hit safely for his base, but Hatfield was prettily caught by Ham, and but for a muff of Addy's at second on the throw in, Higham would have been out on a double play, instead of which bases were made. Start then made a good hit, sending Higham to third. Fisher now let two men in on a wild pitch, but as the next two strikers were well disposed of by Ham and Fulmer, Start was left, the third innings closing with the lead in the hands of the Mutuals by 3 to 1.

In the fourth innings the first two strikers were easily disposed of. After which Hastings hit safely for first base, and after Addy had had a life given him by Ferguson's throw to Start, Stires hit safely to right field, and sent Hastings home. No more runs were scored, however, as Higham fle'ded the third man out. The Mutuals were then easily whitewashed in one, two, three order, leaving the totals at 3 to 2.

Fulmer opened the fifth innings with a safe ball and made his base, but the next three strikers were handsomely fielded out, Hatfield making a pretty catch. On the other side the Mutuals had chances for a whitewash, but by an overthrow by Anson, and a bad fifth innings, with the totals at 4 to 2 in favor of New York, the fielding of the Mutuals being in striking contrast to their poor display in the Rockford game.

The sixth innings did not add anything to the score of the Rockfords, they retiring in one, two, three order. On the other side Wolters opened with a ball which went into Stires' hands at right field. Kepler then hit to Anson who threw the ball low to Mack, and as the latter attempted to pick it up he had his thumb put out, and had to go to left field. Anson going to first base and Kelly to third base. Mills was then fielded out by Fulmer, but the next chance given him he overthrew to first, and after Higham had hit safely for his base, a muff at third let in Ferguson—two more runs being scored by errors.

In the seventh innings the Rockfords punished Wolters by hitting him safely for four first base hits in succession, one run being scored and earned; Mack, after hitting safely for his base, forced to Fisher, the ball being passed to the base he was put out, Hatfield closing the innings with a fly catch, with two men on earned bases. On the other side, after Fearce had earned his base, the Mutuals were retired in one, two, three order. Addy making a fine catch of a fine ball.

The eighth innings, after the two first strikers had been put out, Higham dropped a fly ball and Start a good fly, but by Kepler's catch of a long high ball, the Rockfords were whitewashed. On the other side it was the one, two, three, "side out" again, Ham making a pretty stop, and Mack a good catch.

In the ninth innings Ham opened with a ball to Ferguson, who threw low to Start, and Joe muffed it, and as Fulmer also hit to Ferguson and the ball not being badly thrown it was muffed again and Ham got in. By a muff of Higham's on a throw to second Fulmer had a second life, and getting round on a passed ball he also got in on Mack's hit, the latter being hit out at first. There was now one run to get to tie the Mutual score and the game for the first time became exciting; Anson hit high for Start and the game was won. On the other side the Mutuals were whitewashed. The score:—

ECKFORD vs. MUTUAL.

ANOTHER SIGNAL DEFEAT OF THE MUTUALS.

On the 4th of July last the Eckford Club astonished themselves and the fraternity generally by defeating the Mutual nine by a score of 7 to 6, it being the first time the Mutual Club had ever been "Chicagoed." They came within an ace of it last season, however, at the hands of the Red Stockings, the score standing at 7 to 1; but the Eckfords had the honor of first putting the "combination" nine through the process now known throughout the country as "Chicagoing," a term derived from the contest between the Mutuals and White Stockings of Chicago, in 1870, when the latter were whitewashed in nine consecutive innings, while the Mutuals scored just nine runs, the only time in the history of the game that such a score has ever marked a contest played to a close.

The return game between the Eckfords and Mutual was played July 8th, when the former were badly defeated by a score of 23 to 6. On Saturday, Aug. 19th, the third game was played, and but for two or three fielding errors, and a lack of judgment in pitching in the eighth innings, the Mutuals would have been again whitewashed in nine consecutive innings, their scoring runs only in that one innings, and that chiefly by errors on the part of their opponents. The support given to Martin's pitching by the Eckfords was admirable, but six fielding errors marks have their nine out, as Mills was nursing that sore hand of his and Smith is a new man, who will not play for some time. They had Fleet at second base, who is not up to the required standard of a leading professional, though a good fielder, and they had Higham as catcher, who plays very well in ordinary contests but lacks nerve for emergencies. Hence they were not in condition, to play up to the standard of the great combination nine. As it turned out, however, it seemed to be nearly every man's bad day, for although in their point one more or less, except Patterson, Sweasy, of the Olympics, umpired the game well, showing judgment and impartiality.

THE GAME.

Play was called at 3.35 P. M., with the Rockfords at the bat, and as each of the three first strikers went in, he generously popped a high ball for the fielders to catch, Hicks and Sensenderfer putting the side out. The Mutuals thought nothing of this, as it was but the opening play, and they seldom open with runs in when playing games. On the other side the Eckfords were similarly disposed of, with the exception that Hatfield hit a fine "surf roller" for two bases, all the daisies on the Union grounds having been cut long ago. Fleet and Ferguson put the side out in good style by throws to Start and one bound catch.

In the second innings Wolters opened with a safe hit, and as Start followed with another, the Mutual betting crowd began to invest with confidence on the success of the Green Stockings, and especially did they begin to feel confident when Nelson muffed Fleet's ball, for signs of growing began to be heard, and when this weakness of the Eckfords is indulged in it is generally good bye to victory, unless, as in the Haymaker game, their opponents commit more errors than themselves. Three men were on bases, with but one player out, when Patterson hit a ball to Martin, who promptly returned it to Hicks at home base, and Wolters had to retire from being forced out at home base, and as Kepler tipped out, the Mutuals had to again take the field a whitewashed party. On the other side, though four men were sent to the bat, the Eckfords drew a blank, and the first run had yet to be scored in the game. This close work gave promise of a fine contest, and as the game progressed Eckford stock took a rise in the market, especially as it was seen that an effort was being made to check their growing propensities.

In the third innings the Mutuals were again disposed of in one, two, three order, as in the first innings. Allison making a good stop and Hicks capturing two fly balls prettily. On the other side, after the first striker had fouled out, Nelson hit a hot one to Pearce, who fumbled the ball, and thereby gave him a life. Chapman then hit a beauty along the smooth turf for one base, and sent Nelson home, Hatfield allowing Chapman's grounder to pass him, and on the throw in to Fleet the latter failed to handle the ball. Chapman secured his second. A passed ball assisted him round, and after Hicks' high ball to Hatfield had been handsomely caught, Chapman came in on Holdsworth's pretty ground hit, the latter earning his base shortly then hit to Fleet, who muffed the ball, and on this error some other run was scored, a throw by Higham to Ferguson putting out Shelly at third, he overrunning his base. The Eckfords now stood in the van by a score of 3 to 0.

From the third to the sixth innings inclusive the Eckfords scored no less than six more runs on first base hits, the Mutuals kindly assisting them by a total of eight important fielding errors, of which three save lives which prevented blank scores, the only errors on the ground being those made in the sixth innings, of which two were earned of the five scored. A double play was made in the fourth innings by Pearce, Start and Higham, through bad base running by Martin, and by Wolters and Start in the fifth. On the Mutual side Uncle Salamen did little else than to pop up nice balls for the Eckford fielders to catch, and not a base hit being made by them until the sixth innings, when Wolters hit a high and safe ball to left field for three bases, and as there was but one man out at the time it was expected that the Mutuals would score the coveted run which was to prevent their second Chicago game, but the next striker tipped out, and so Wolters was left, the sixth innings closing with a score of 12 to 0 in favor of the Eckfords, and a well earned victory almost a foregone conclusion.

In the seventh innings neither side scored a run, the Mutuals going out on fly balls. On the other side Martin opened with a two base hit, and but for more bad base running by Nelson, another run would have been scored; instead, a double play by Eggler and Fleet ended the innings.

In the eighth inning Hatfield was allowed to take his base on called balls, after which Higham hit safely for his base, and by a passed ball another base was secured. Wolters then had his base given him on called balls, and as Start hit safely for his base and Kelly too, Fleet fouled out, but Ferguson came to the rescue with a safe hit, and by a wild throw of Hicks, he got round and sent in Wolters. The next two were put out, and these were the last runs scored in the game, as the Eckfords were whitewashed in succession, and the Mutuals failed to score in their last innings. Of the 27 outs on the Mutual side 24 were by catches, the Eckfords only putting out five men on bases, while on the other side but eleven were put out on fly catches. In batting Wolters and Start took the lead on the Mutual side, and Chapman and Holdsworth on the part of the Eckfords. Gedney's left fielding was specially noteworthy, as was that of Hatfield. Hicks also plays very finely in his position. The game does not change the position of the Mutuals in the championship arena, as the committee have decided that the Eckfords are not legal contestants, they having neither notified the committee of their intention to enter or sent the fee in until months after the time appointed. The attendance on the occasion did not exceed a thousand people. The score:—

CUPID'S FOIBLES, FOLLIES AND FANCIES.

"BOILED."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,

BY ARTHUR W. FRENCH.

Friendless, forsaken; faith in life shaken,
There the great city I wander'd adorn,
Some, in their kindness, pity my "blindness,"
Others pass by me with laughter and scorn.
Friends have departed, now broken-hearted,
Cheering few words, never caring for me;
Life is so weary, earth is so dreary,
Death would be better than that I should be.

Days of my childhood, passed in the wild wood,
Then I was pure as the blossoms of snow;
Hope I have fallen, loved ones have fallen
Me back from this life of sorrow and woe;
Still I, unheeding, deaf to all pleading,
Drifting along in this current of sin,
In the dark river (oh, how I shiver.)
I shall find rest from this anguish within.

Down where the daisies whisper their praises
To God, the Father of Love and of Light,
When I'm dead let me sleep, and forget me,
Lying at rest 'neath their blossoms of white.
Never forget me, never regret me,
He is his kindness, per'haps, will forgive
All my sad sinning: for I am praying
That in his mansions at last I may live.

UNSAFE SAVIERS.

ONE WOMAN FATALLY SHOT BY ANOTHER AT STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.

Another exciting event has occurred in California, in which jealousy on the part of one female against another seems to have been the cause. It appears that a Mrs. N. J. Savier, of Carson, Nevada, arrived at Stockton, Cal., on the night of July 31st, and learning that her husband was staying with Mrs. Julia Lake, at the Grand Hotel, went there and shot Mrs. Lake three times, which resulted in her death at 11.16 A. M., on the 2d inst. Both Mr. and Mrs. Savier had been in durance vile, but the former had been released and was with her in her dying moments, displaying great affection, which was reciprocated by the dying woman. Every care and attention was bestowed upon her by the landlord and boarders at the hotel; the ladies, particularly, were lavish in kindness, and speak in the highest terms of the lady-like conduct of the unhappy deceased. The following is the substance of a document now being circulated among the young men and meeting with approval:—

TO N. J. SAVIER.—Your connection with the late unfortunate affair in this city, in which one woman, through your dastardly conduct, lost her life, and another her fair name and peace of mind, renders you obnoxious to this community. You are therefore warned to leave the city within eight hours or you will receive, as a partial token of our displeasure, a coat of tar and feathers.

DYING DECLARATION OF JULIA LAKE.

I, Julia Lake, being dangerously wounded and believing that I have but a short time to live, do make this my dying declaration:—Last night I was in my room at the Grand Hotel, in the City of Stockton. Some person came to the door and rapped. I got up, opened the door and let in a woman. The woman I knew as Mrs. Savier. She had a stick in each hand and had my head tied up. I said "Yes." She said she would make me sicker. She got up—we were sitting down—and shot at me three times. The first shot took me in the shoulder, the second in the side, and the third in the thigh. She then left and went out. The woman said her name was Julia Savier. I did nothing while the woman was shooting. The paper shown me was on my lap while she was shooting.

At the coroner's inquest the following witnesses were sworn and examined:—W. F. Fletcher, chief of police; N. J. Savier, J. J. Evans, L. Barada, Philip Myers, Edwin L. Dole:—

TESTIMONY OF THE DOCTOR.

Dr. Samuel Langdon was sworn, and testified as follows:—I was called on Monday night, between ten and eleven o'clock, to attend the deceased; I found three shots, one in the shoulder, one in the thigh, both of which were inconsiderable; the third shot was a fatal shot, and which caused her death: it entered about an inch and a quarter or an inch and a half from the umbilicle on the right side, penetrating the cavity and perforating the stomach, passing through and rounding the membranes in its course, until it made its exit at the opposite side through the back, passing in a very slight oblique manner; the wound was six inches in depth; ran made a statement to me of the circumstances attending the shooting; at the time she made this statement I told her she would not get well; she asked me if I thought so, and I told her I did; her name is Julia Lake, so she said; she stated in the first intimation she had of any one coming she heard a knock at the door; she said, "walk in," when the party knocking did enter; seeing my head bound up, she asked, "Are you shot?" I told her "yes;" she replied, "I am sorry you are sicker," whereupon she shot me three times—in the shoulder, thigh and the stomach. When she first entered she said down, then rose and shot me, and then remarked, "there," and left. I was sitting in a chair when I was shot, holding a paper in my lap which I had been reading. The name of the woman who shot me was Julia Savier. The balls that entered the stomach passed through the paper. There were gunpowder marks on the paper.

VERDICT OF THE JURY.

We, the jurors summoned to appear by M. H. Bond, coroner, to inquire into the cause of the death of Julia S. Lake, after hearing the testimony adduced, do find that the deceased was named Julia S. Lake, age about 29 years; that she came to her death on the 2d day of August, 1871, in the city and county, by the pistol shot fired by Mrs. Julia E. Savier, and that said shooting took place on Monday evening, July 31st, 1871. Stockton, August 2d, 1871. Signed, R. W. Miller, W. C. Miller, John Ginn, B. H. Weston, Jesse Irvine, W. Crandall.

THE LAST MOMENTS OF THE VICTIM.

During Mrs. Lake's last moments she was surrounded by all the ladies of the hotel, who had formed a warm attachment for her; also, Dr. Langdon, District Attorney Budd, Judge Brown and others. She was asked to receive a minister and she remarked:—"Oh! pshaw; I don't think so. Oh! I should like to see my children much." Mr. Savier has shown the most devoted attention. She said that she often had said that she thought enough of Savier to die for him, and now she would at last. After she was shot she remarked to her assailant:—"I believe you have killed me." The reply was:—"Just what I wanted to do." So say parties who nursed the wounded woman after she was shot. She was delicate in talking known that she was shot. Upon arrival of assistance, she remarked:—"I shall try to live for my children's sake." The assailant is accused of saying to Mrs. Lake:—"You threatened to kill me." Her reply was:—"I never did." So says the attendant of the deceased. She had a letter hall written to Savier, and it seems by it that she intended to go to her husband, Mr. Lake, in Eureka, Nevada, who had written for her. She evidently was at one time a member of the Episcopal church, and regularly offered prayers, morning and night, to her Maker. She has been known to take in washing for the maintenance of her children. Force of circumstances, in all probability, has had much to do with the unpleasant light she is now in with the public. She was born in Tennessee, an only child of a rich planter. Her mother died when she was eleven years old. Her father married a second wife when she was but twelve years. Afterward they lived in St. Louis, Mo., where she was married to Jos. Coddington, who died from reverses of fortune, combined with dissipation. She had two sons by him, who are now at school in Carson. Savier has been frightened away. He left for Sacramento. Public sentiment wavers; the people are getting tired of this life-taking under any pretext. Previous to the death sympathy was with the wife. Her general record will bear much comment, from which we forbear at present. Mrs. Glynn, the mother, an old lady of fine appearance, 71 years of age, arrived last Saturday and visited her daughter at the prison, and their meeting was, of course, very affecting. Her brother accompanied her mother. He is a gentleman of considerable sharpness and takes the matter philosophically; claims much wrong as having been done his sister by Savier, and remarked that he regretted that she had wasted the two remaining shots in the pistol, which he (Savier) deserved. A letter written to Mr. Glynn, by brother, by Savier, in care of Samuel Wright, at Carson, contains in substance that Mrs. Lake was enciente by him, and he feared she might kill his wife and him too, if she came here. Savier states he wrote this to keep his wife away, and it was this letter that enraged her, when shown to her by her brother, and animated the rash act. A letter from Mr. Glynn to Mr. Savier is a document which is allowed to rest at present, as it will have a bearing on the trial. The prisoner is very kindly treated generally by the officials in and about the jail. Strong efforts will be made for her acquittal. The District Attorney will do his duty and has commenced to give his attention to the matter, while the public will watch for justice with an eager eye. Mrs. Cady Stanton and Susan B. Anthony arrived from Yosemite and visited the woman in prison.

HIGH LIFE IN HIGH PLACES.

THE EX-EMPEROR NAPOLEON CHARGED WITH INTRIGUE.

Toward the latter end of November, 1860, the Empress Eugenie startled the friends and enemies of the Bonaparte dynasty by a private visit to this country. Napoleon, the Empress's husband, made aware of her resolution at the eleventh hour, so far waved aside business as to be "just in time" to see her off at the Northern Railway Terminus, and, although it was given out that the Empress' journey had no other object as to spend a few days with her former governess in Scotland, still there was something so sudden and clandestine in her departure and in her style of traveling that it could not fail at the time to give rise to every variety of report and conjecture. The members of the French Embassy in London, whose duty it is to telegraph acquainted with the Empress' movements, attended at an early hour to receive their sovereign's consort at any of the stations at which she might be expected to arrive. Somehow, the august traveler contrived to escape their attentions, and once fairly unrecognized, and accompanied only by one gentleman and two ladies of her suite, to Claridge's Hotel, whence, after a quiet saunter in Regent street, she proceeded by rail to Scotland, and was next heard of at Edinburgh, at Glasgow, and on the track of numerous tourists. After a three weeks' stay, and a private visit to the Tuileries. One anxious Queen, at Windsor, she re-appeared in town for the death of her sister, the Duchess of Alva; another to a passing fit of harmless constrictor; another to a longing, natural in one not born in the purple, to withdraw, for however short a period, from the weary monotony of her lofty station. But none of these seemed sufficient and the supposition which obtained most publicity was that the flight of the Empress was the result of some storm in the Imperial household, and, as Eugenie was extremely devout, and at that moment the Emperor had just openly countenanced the Italian invasion of the Marches and Umbria, and was bringing pressure to bear on the Pope to consent to the loss of those provinces, it was surmised that husband and wife had quarreled about the Roman question. But there were, besides, shrewder newsmongers who asserted that jealousy was at the bottom of the Imperial disagreement, that the Empress had taken umbrage at some indiscretion of her lord, the Emperor, and had vowed not to go back to him unless the cause of offense was removed.

Whatever mystery might yet have hung upon that now almost forgotten episode in a wedded life which has been otherwise singularly free from domestic clouds has been unveiled by the sentence pronounced by the French Court of Cessation in favor of M. Devienne, the late first President of the Court of Paris. It seems now certain that the Emperor had really, some time before that short breach of his domestic peace, succumbed to the fascinations of a young lady whose beauty was the theme of much conversation in the Paris world, and that the displeasure of the Empress was caused by the reports which reached her of the degree of intimacy existing between this lady and the Emperor, and of the consequences the connection had entailed, which could hardly fail to lead to some scandalous exposure. The happiness of the wife and the safety of the husband required something more than the removal of the rival. It was necessary to obtain from her a retraction of the assertions upon which she founded her claims, and upon the strength of which she threatened to bring the Emperor before a court of law. The Empress, generously giving up all idea of a divorce, and consenting to a reconciliation with her erring husband, exerted herself to extort from her rival a declaration to the effect that she had deceived the Emperor, and that their intercourse had no such results as she had led him to believe.

We do not think that, on of France at least, people will greatly concern themselves about the part played by the chief president of the Imperial court in this delicate transaction. All the interest concentrates itself on one point, and that is the wholesome fear the Emperor Napoleon entertained as to the consequences of his indiscretion. He was at that time in the height of his popularity, for his Lombard campaign had won him the applause even of his enemies, while the annexation of Savoy and Nice had reconciled to him the advocates of a more strictly national policy. But a lawsuit, such as his culpable attachment so nearly involved him in, was more than even in all his glory he might be would have sustained to fine. His wife, though pitiable to the fault, would have been intolerable to its exposure, and peace could hardly have been made unless a means for himself and his dynasty would be found to hush up the scandal. The Emperor's prospects for himself and his dynasty would be found to hush up the scandal. The Emperor's prospects ance, and the nation which had condoned the errors of his and his consorted personal rule would have murmured at domestic irregularities in which society shows only too much indulgence, but which the high rank of the offender would not have allowed it to ignore. In our age, when we place kings and princes above us, we expect them to be the best among us; and if they actually are not what we would have them, we insist, at least, on their seeming to be so.

The above is an editorial in a recent issue of the London (Eng.,) Times, which drew forth a denial from the ex-Empress Eugenie of a contemplated divorce. While thus publishing an expose of Napoleon's intrigues, why does not the Times, as the closing lines of the above makes a light attempt therein, give a more emphatic exposure to the grosser conduct of the Prince of Wales, the expected to be next king of Great Britain, and thus make effort to stop him in his wild career, and not have the throne in danger of being tarnished with the "king's evil?"

LYNCH HIM.—On August 16th, at Rockford, Ill., a negro named Smith committed an outrage upon the daughter of Hon. E. B. Walters, aged eleven years. The excitement among the citizens in consequence is intense, and they talk of lynching the wretch.

MARRIAGE AND MATERNITY.

In a recent lecture at San Francisco, Mrs. Stanton, the woman's rights advocate, said:—"The idea that woman is weak inherently is a grand mistake. She is physically weak because she neglects her baths—because she violates every law of her nature and her God—because she dresses in a way that would kill a man. I feel it to be my mission to arouse every woman to bring up her daughter without breaking her up in doing so. Our female idea of dress is all wrong. My girlhood was spent mostly in the open air. I early imbibed the idea that a girl was as good as a boy and I carried it out. I would walk five miles before breakfast, or ride ten on horseback. After I was married I wore my clothing sensibly. The weight hung more on my shoulders. I never compressed my body out of its natural shape. My first four children were born and I suffered very little. I then made up my mind that it was totally unnecessary for me to suffer at all, so I dressed lightly, walked every day, lived as much as possible in the open air, ate no condiments or spices, kept quiet, listened to music, looked at pictures, read poetry. The night before the birth of the child I walked three miles. The child was born without a particle of pain. I bathed it and dressed it and it weighed ten and a half pounds. The same day I dined with the family. Everybody said I would surely die, but I never had a relapse or a moment's inconvenience from it. Another idea:—It is of more importance what kind of a child we raise than how many. It is better to produce one lion than twelve lambeses. We have got jackasses enough; let us go for the lion business. Suppose our great statesmen, Clay, Webster and others like them, had had only the society of refined and educated women, they would not have, as they did, looked upon women only in a physical light. If men have dolls for wives they will seek the society of intellectual courtesans. We must have a new type of womanhood. We need it more than gold. Courtesans will rule this country unless woman rises to her true dignity. The old idea of the oak and the vine is pretty, but it is mere poetry; the emergencies of life prove its falsity—the lightning strikes them both alike."

RAPE.—A SINGULAR CONFICTION.—In the court of General Sessions, yesterday, John Killing was placed at the bar, charged with committing an outrage upon the person of a Mrs. Lawlor, of West Twenty-sixth street. The woman, in her affidavit, states that about 5 o'clock, P. M., on the 21st of July, she was passing along by the North river, near the foot of West Twenty-seventh street, when Killing rushed out from a deserted shanty and, dragging her in, gagged her and then accomplished his designs; that Killing was assisted in his crime by a second party, unknown to her; that they left Mrs. Lawlor in the shanty from 5 until 10 o'clock, P. M., and sent out for some beer, of which she drank two glasses. When released she went home and told her husband and children, one of the latter of whom recognized, from the description given by his mother, a man named Killing. This man was arrested and, when confronted with Mrs. Lawlor in the Twentieth Precinct Station house, she failed at first to recognize him. When Killing spoke and put on his hat she said he was the man. Little boy named Patrick Walsh testified that he brought some beer to the shanty on the evening of the alleged outrage, and that he saw Mrs. Lawlor sitting on a bench talking to two men. Killing was not one of those men. Miss Hannah Carr, of No. 505 West Twenty-seventh street, testified that on the evening of the 21st of July she was talking to the prisoner, Killing, at her own door, from 6 to 8 P. M. The recorder then charged the jury, after which they retired, returning in about twenty minutes with a verdict of guilty. In sentencing the prisoner to ten years in the state prison, the recorder expressed the opinion that Killing was not guilty of the crime of which the jury had convicted him.—N. Y. Star, Aug. 11th.

THE SOCIAL EVIL QUESTION IN ENGLAND.—The experiment of legalizing prostitution in England is meeting strong opposition from a large and respectable section of the public, which is thus commented upon by a writer in the London News, he says:—"I oppose all such legislation, because I believe it to be utterly opposed to New Testament principles, which I choose to make the guide of my political conduct; but as the Government of this country has now nothing to do with christianity or any other religion, I could not urge such an argument in the House of Commons. But I have a right to complain of this monstrous contradiction and absurdity. We are paying six millions a year of national property to a body of ministers, partly to teach our people that fornication is a deadly sin. This legislation as to what we are pleased to call public women is brought upon us by the state of our standing army. This highly paid body of ministers are employed to teach that marriage is permitted to all and enjoined to many by God himself. In our army marriage is permitted to very few and forbidden to all the rest; and then we are told that prostitution is a necessity. So we come to this, that deadly sin is a necessity. On this ground alone I can never give a vote to any man who will not pledge himself to the entire repeal of these obnoxious acts. But I object to acts on democratic grounds. They have been passed without the knowledge and are now maintained against the convictions and wishes of an enormous majority of our workingmen; if we could only get the ballot, so as to enable them to carry their convictions and wishes into effect, we should very soon relieve the police from the odious duty of apprehending women on suspicion of being prostitutes."

CHASTISING AN ADULTERER.—Another sad case of domestic infidelity was developed on the west side of Christian Hill, Providence, R. I., on Aug. 10th:—"A young mechanic who resided in that locality and had been married but little over a year, went home unexpectedly at noon time and found his young and faithless wife and a young railroad brakeman occupying the same bed in criminal intimacy. The infuriated husband seized the libertine, dragged him from the bed and knocked and kicked him about the room, during which time the fellow managed to partially dress himself, and he was then seized again by the man he had so shamefully wronged and thrown headlong through an open second story window to the ground. He was not so much hurt by the fall but that he got upon his feet, by which time the husband had reached the street and again attacked and knocked the villain down, and then left him lying there, disabled and bleeding. He then went into the house, and after a few parting words with his false wife, he took a final leave of her and the home she had disgraced and ruined, leaving the bruised and battered wretch outside, the destroyer of his happiness, to crawl away and hide himself when and where he saw fit. The mortified parents of the dishonored and untrue wife, residing in Bristol county, Mass., visited her during the afternoon, and she was expected to return home with them to mourn over her sin and folly, when it is probable that her paramour will yet find more evidence that 'the way of the transgressor is hard.'"

OUTRAGE.—Matilda Maull, an Irish woman, who had been living as a servant in Camden, but has recently been out of a situation and boarding at a house at Sixth and Spruce streets, started Saturday evening, in a Walnut street car, for West Philadelphia, to see about a place which she had heard of, on Thirty-seventh street, between Market and Chestnut. She had with her a bundle of clothing and a handkerchief full of peaches. Not being familiar with the streets in West Philadelphia, she got out of the car near Thirty-fifth street and turned up towards Market street; when about half way between the two streets she sat down to rest herself and eat some peaches, when, she alleges, she was set upon by a party of colored men and dragged down a hollow in a vacant lot, where all the men committed felonious assaults upon her and robbed her of $3.19. She screamed murder and attracted the attention of the police. They succeeded in arresting five of the party, who gave the names of Frank Hand, Christian Bland, William Cuthbert, Allen Agnew and Isaac Ware. The prisoners had a hearing yesterday morning before Alderman Becker at the Central Station, when they were identified by the woman as part of the gang that assaulted her. They were all commit ed to prison for a further hearing.—Philadelphia Public Ledger, Aug. 14th.

FREE LOVE.—Some six months since a couple by the name of Williams took up their abode in Dutch Kills. The husband was a hard working mechanic, and the wife a bright eyed, middle aged woman, of more than ordinary attractions. A number of children, the oldest a girl fourteen years of age, were the fruit of their marriage life. Up to this date everything had passed off pleasantly between the parties, but in an evil hour a young man named John Owens came to reside in the family. Soon matters began to look wrong. The wife was talked of by her neighbors, and the eldest girl declares that her mother and Owens would be locked up in the bedroom for hours. During a quarrel upon this subject between the husband and wife, on the 17th of July, the wife, seizing a large butcher knife, plunged it into the neck of her husband and immediately fled with Owens, leaving the wounded man for dead. Fortunately no vital part was struck, and Williams lived. A warrant was immediately issued for Mrs. Williams, but until a day or two since she could not be found. She was finally arrested in Greenpoint, with her paramour, and, on Aug. 11th, brought before Recorder Parcells, of Long Island City, who held both Mrs. Williams and John Owens to await the action of the grand jury.

DEPRAVITY'S CONSEQUENCES.—A wretched looking, prematurely old woman, arrayed in rags, with her features swollen and bruised, was brought before Justice Cox, at the Jefferson Market Police Court, on the 4th inst., says the N. Y. Times of the next day, on a charge of intoxication. The officials recognized her as Margaret Walsh. Her history is one of peculiar interest. Twenty-five years ago she left the home of respectable parents in Troy, and came to this city to reside. She was then a comely girl of fifteen years of age, and she easily procured a place as waiter maid in a fashionable restaurant. Among her many admirers was a wealthy man, with whom she eloped. He deserted her within three years, and she then abandoned herself to a life of shame. A long course of dissipation left her a mere wreck. At length she committed the most wicked act of her life by murdering Policeman McObeseny, who attempted to arrest her for disorderly conduct in Greene street a few years ago. She was sentenced to the penitentiary for two years, but never served out her term, being released on a writ of error. Since that event she has rapidly sunk lower and lower into the depths of disgrace and misery. She made an abject appeal to Justice Cox yesterday, to let her go, but he told her that he would be compelled to commit her to the Island.

A WOLF IN SHEEP'S CLOTHING.—John Wolf, a saloon keeper of Port Chester, Westchester Co., N. Y., was seen on Saturday morning by Capt. Irving, of the detective force, attempting to inveigle Bridget Walsh into a house of prostitution in Mercer street. The officer took them both to Police Headquarters. The girl said that she had only been two weeks in the country, and had come that morning from Port Chester on her way to the residence of her parents, at No. 13 Thompson street. The prisoner said he would direct her, and while they were going down town he offered to procure a situation for her. He first took her to a house in West Houston street, saying that his sister lived there. This is known to the Police as a house of prostitution. None of the inmates answered his summons and he then induced her to go with him to Mercer street, affirming that an acquaintance lived there. The prisoner, on the complaint of the girl, was committed to the Tombs by Justice Hogan to await trial. It is alleged that he has been guilty of similar practices on previous occasions.—N. Y. Tribune, Aug. 7.

FREE LOVE IN CANADA.—The doctrine of freedom to leave and remarry again is not a success in Canada. A woman recently had some difficulty with her husband and she told him if he didn't behave himself she would marry some one else. He told her he wished she would, and she replied that if he would give her a "paper," giving his consent, she would do so. The "paper" was given and off she went and got married, but just as the knot was tied in rushed the husband and said he had changed his mind. The minister, who didn't understand what it all meant, made inquiries, and learning how things stood, said he would unmarry them, and kicked the man out of one door and turned the woman out of the other.

SENTENCED.—A man named Samuel Bixler, living in Cherokee county, Kansas, was convicted last week and sentenced to twenty-one years in the penitentiary, for outraging the person of his own daughter, and repeating the offense at different times. The girl is aged fourteen, Bixler is aged fifty two, and has been twice married. He has five children, all of whom, it is alleged, he has attempted to outrage.

BONES GOES TO LONG BRANCH.

INTRODUCTION.—Really, Mr. Bones, I did not look to see you back so soon. Has Long Branch ceased to possess any attractions for you?

BONES.—O, dere was distractions enough, for dat matter, but de fact is, ober sense de president and his cabinet got to running dere it ain't so pleas dat it used to be. So crowded dis time dat me and some of de boys had to sleep on de roof, dough de president offer me de use of his door mat. Dat night dey gave a hop, and dere was so many people on de floor dat I couldn't help bein reminded of dem be de skippers out frien and played about me so lively, all de time I was at de Branch. I'erhaps dat's de reason why de surf am all de time sendin' de beach. And wasn't it hot, dough? It was so hot dat Mrs. Rosy's, where dey had some fust class vocalists, de skating rink of one of de ladies rocked de heavy of her children, and all de fancy drinks at de bar turned to punches as fast as dey was made. Dere was a certain low comedian dere flounderin' in de water, and he play so many antics dat de bystanders laugh in spite of themselves, and he made cures for very lookers near. De public dinner to de officials was de grand affair of all. All de big folks of de city come down to attend it. And it was dere dat I make de great sensation round but little difficulty in defending their wickets from dem; but with Jackson's bowling the case was different, and the result was that the first three wickets fell to his credit, and before he resigned in favor of Byron he had taken four wickets. Bance made a good defence for nearly an hour, scoring 14, marked by a 4 drive off Rogerson and two threes. He was missed by Jackson, off his own bowling, after scoring 5. "Fawcett" did nothing worthy of notice, and Granger retired for a duck egg. Orr, however, made a fine stand for nearly an hour, he handling the willow very handsomely for a capitally obtained 16, with no "forces cut" to spoil his display, a 3 to leg off Rogerson marking his score. Like Bance, he was prettily caught at long leg by Higham, Byron being the bowler, he having gone on at Jackson's end. Moersan followed Bance, and secured an average score before he left, he giving place to Moore, who began scoring with beauty to leg for 4, and he afterwards punished Rogerson's pacers in a style, which he did not admire at all, as in five successive overs he hit him for 14, all twos at that. Finally, after Moore had run up the full total of 22, including a four, a three and six twos, he was neatly caught by Keeler off Rogerson, the latter throwing up his bat at having at last secured a single wicket, and by a catch at that. Gibbes had followed Orr, but he had only scored 4 when he was splendidly caught by Byron off his own bowling, and retired in favor of Earnshaw, who, with Moore, punished Rogerson quite easily, Earnshaw's 9 having four twos in it. The remainder of the eleven did but little, Jones being prettily stumped by Lemond, off Byron, the former keeping wicket in fine style, while the latter contributed the most effective bowling, Caldfield catching the last man out off Byron. Rogerson only taking one wicket for 90 runs and 114 balls. The last wicket fell for 87, of which 76 were off the bat, the extras being four, Hatfield long stopping well, considering the pace of the bowling.

At 4:20 P. M., New York sent in Cashman and Higgins to the bowling of Gibbes and Jones, the latter being, like Rogerson, very fast, but having a higher delivery. In this innings his bowling was unusually straight, of good length and quite effective. Neither of the batsmen did much in the scoring line, both being bowled cheaply; Higgins retiring on the first ball from Gibbes. Cashman got off a good hit to leg for 3 before he left. Rogerson and Keeler succeeded them, and changed the figures from 14 to 48, at which total the score stood when Keeler was well caught at slip off Jones, a splendid hit to square leg for 5 being the feature of the match. He did not give a chance, and bagged the only wicket in the innings. Rogerson had scored 3 singles when he sent a ball direct into Jackson's hands at midoff, but the ball was dropped. After adding three more singles he gave Granger a nice chance for a catch, and afterwards popped up balls which active base ball players would have captured without much difficulty. He also gave Bance a chance, after scoring 27. With these exceptions he defended his wicket well, but not in the style he used to play records when in Canada. Before he was disposed of he had none of the best of the bowling by two threes, Jones bowling him, and he was so pleased at it that he turned a sommersault. None of the others scored even average figures, Leonard being badly run out by Rogerson, and Hatfield also after scoring 4. McDougall got off a cut for 3 and carried his bat out. The last wicket fell for 70 only, after the third had fallen for 48. Orr kept wicket well, and Earnshaw proved an effective long stop. Thus closed the first day's play, with the St. George in the van by 18 runs.

On Thursday the game was resumed, and in their second innings the St. George eleven were disposed of for 69 only, which left the New Yorkers 87 to get to win in the second innings, in which Hatfield bore off the palm by a score of 42. He was missed by Fawcett after scoring 28, and afterwards by Jones and Fawcett again. In fact, his batting was the feature of the day's play. Higgins contributed 9, in his usual excellent style, and Keier added 9 well. None of the rest scored average figures. Leonard and Jackson were in when the game was ended, New York winning with three wickets to fall.

NELL GWYNNE,

ORANGE GIRL, ACTRESS, CHARLES SECOND'S MISTRESS.

Nell Gwyne was, probably, the only woman who was at once the chere amie of an English monarch and the object of popular affection (for it really amounted to affection in her case). This was traceable to the fact that she had very little pride about her. When the ci-devant orange girl was as brave as jewels could make her, and had a King's pocket to dip her hand into for her new position, she still continued to act at the King's Theatre, and enchant all who came to see her with the mad, merry parts, which had originally brought her into favor.

Pretty, witty, Nell was a favorite with everybody. As a proof of this an eminent goldsmith of her time used to relate that when he was an apprentice his master made a most expensive service of plate as a present from the King to the Duchess of Portsmouth, another royal mistress. Great crowds of people used to enter the shop to gratify their curiosity and throw out curses against the Dutchess, but all were unanimous in wishing the present had been for Nelly Gwynne.

Nature seemed to have qualified her for the theatre. Her person, though below the middle size, was well turned, her face pleasing and expressive, her eyes full of vivacity and life, and so small that they became almost invisible when she laughed. Her feet were of the most diminutive size and her hair of an auburn color, gold upon a ground of black.

"I am resolved," said Nell in her part of Florimel in the "Maiden Queen," "to grow fat and look young till forty, and then slip out of the world with the first wrinkle and the reputation of five and twenty." And she was just forty when she died, and young she certainly was, and without a wrinkle all her life.

It is pleasant to know that Nell Gwyne died, not in her sins, but in the order of sanctity. She was very orthodox during the last few years of her life and left several bequests of a charitable nature, which were signed with her initials, "E. G.," for Nell could not write her name, and tradition ascribes the foundation of the Royal Hospital at Chelsea to her influence with King Charles.

Here is a curious instance of the scarces whence sprang some of the present proud families of England. Nell Gwyne had two sons by King Charles. "Come hither, you little bastard!" said she, one day, to her eldest son, in presence of the king. The boy came and the mother was reproved in a gentle manner, by the Merry Monarch, for calling her son such a name. Nell was not wanting in a reply. She had no better name, she said, to call him by. The king understood the excuse and on the 27th of December, 1666, he was created Baron of Heddington and Earl of Burford, and on the 10th of January, 1683, he was made Duke of St. Albans.

Now this was the origin of the present noble house of St. Albans, which stands the sixth ducal name in the peerage of England. We, plain republicans over here, may be permitted to wonder whether this noble family are excessively proud of the fact that they are noble because their founder happened to be the illegitimate offspring of a king, by an orange girl.

DIED IN THE STREET.

BY CLAUDE DE HAVEN.

The labor is over and done,
The sun has gone down in the west,
The birds are asleep, every one,
All nature has gone to its rest.
But one little sleeper is out in the cold,
Alone in the rain and sleet;
There's no one to greet him with welcome kiss
Or list to his coming feet.

Chorus—Dead, dead—found dead in the street,
Dead in the cold night air,
Dead for the want of a crust,
With no one to pity or care.

The daisy looks up from the grass,
Fresh from the dews of night,
To welcome the throngs as they pass,
And the sparrow sings merry delight;
But one little sleeper has gone to his rest,
Has gone to his Heavenly birth,
Where angels are waiting to welcome him home,
To join in the heavenly mirth.

Chorus—Dead, dead, etc.

THE TURF.

THE SARATOGA RACE MEETING.

FIRST DAY, WEDNESDAY, AUG. 16TH.

THE CLIPPER CUP WINS THE $10,000 MATCH—HARRY BASSETT THE KENNER STAKES—HAMBURG THE SUMMER HANDICAP—ORTOLAN THE THREE-QUARTER DASH.

With delightful weather, and a fine track, the inauguration of the August meeting of the Saratoga Racing Association, and we are gratified to state that it opened under auspices of the most favorable and gladdening character, both for the pecuniary emolument of the managers and the gratification of the large assemblage in attendance—greater than was ever present at this course since the initial meeting of the association. The weather, too, was just suitable, the rain which fell in the morning having sufficed to agreeably temper the heat of the atmosphere, and settle the dust, while a fresh breeze blew across the track from the westward. While the sojourners at other fashionable watering places have noticeably diminished in numbers of late, the season at Saratoga is at its height and the butterflies of fashion and their admirers swarm in greater numbers than they have at any time since the summer solstice set in—indeed, so great is the crowd that many of those who journeyed thither solely to see the races, have found it utterly impossible to procure accommodation at either hotels or private residences, and have been obliged to "rough it," some taking a shake-down on the floor, which they were fortunate in securing, and others courting Nature's sweet restorer beneath the canopy of the star-spangled blue. Leading turfmen from every section of the country were congregated on the quarter-stretch, engaged in comparing notes, earnestly discussing the probable issue of the several events arranged for decision during the day, and speculating, upon a given book basis, on the chances of the competing horses. The grand stand was literally packed with divinities of the opposite persuasion, encased in gorgeous apparel and attended by spruce cavaliers or more sedate looking papas, while the turn-out of elegant equipages was extensive and gave the beholder an idea of the wealth represented by the visitors now at "the Springs."

THE TWO-YEAR OLD MATCH

opened the meeting, odds of $100 to $75 being offered on the Eclipse colt, who showed in front at the start, was never headed—though the Lexington filly closest at his heels up to the half-mile pole, and won handily by two lengths. Time, 1:07¾. Summary:—

PURSE DAY, Aug. 16th.—Match, $2,000 a side, h f two-year olds; each party to name two colts or fillies and to select their choice at the post; one mile.

R. W. Cameron named dark br f by Leamington dam Florida; and br f by Leamington dam Stolen Kisses 2
Time, 1:47¾.

THE KENNER STAKES,

a three year old race, over a two mile course, had forty-seven entries, only seven of whom started, however, viz., Harry Bassett, Nathan Oaks, Nellie Ransom, Eolus, Wise Sap, Express and Alroy. Harry was an immense favorite, selling for one pool for $560; Express, $45; Eolus and Wise Sap, $20 each; Alroy, $25; Nellie Ransom and Nathan, $10 each. The Doswell pair were first to get away, followed by Oaks, with Bassett next and the others bunched. Express went to the front going around the turn, Bassett taking third place, close behind Eolus. The quarter pole was passed by Express two lengths before Eolus, who was immediately afterwards deprived of second place by the favorite, who was on even terms with Express at the half mile pole, and gave him the go by after a sharp but brief brush, Harry leading by a length at the stand. Eolus likewise collared and passed Express along the lower stretch, taking second position, while Alroy and Ransom, following his example, made a dead heat for third place. Harry continued to increase his lead at will, and won as he pleased, never having been extended during the race. After the first mile Express fell back hopelessly beaten. Time, 3:55¾, which is the best on record by a three year old, with 1 00 pounds up. Summary:—

SAME DAY.—The Kenner Stakes, for three year olds, $100 entrance, $50 forfeit, $1,000 to be added by the Association; two miles.

THE SUMMER HANDICAP

was third on the day's calendar and was for all ages, two miles and a quarter. Seven entries had been made, of which five came to the post, viz:—Felicity, Hamburg, Edenton, Finesse and Barney Williams. Finesse had the call, Barney second choice and Felicity third, while the least fancied of the lot was Hamburg. At the fall of the flag Edenton jumped off in the lead, Williams just behind him with Hamburg third and the others close up. The mile was completed with Barney a length to the good, Edenton now falling to the rear, and Finesse and Hamburg contending for second place, lapping the leader. During the latter half of the stretch Hamburg's rider urged him forward, and, after one of the finest, most exciting struggles ever witnessed, he won by three-quarters of a length. Time, 4:01¾, a quarter of a second more than the time made by Kentucky over the same course, with two pounds less weight. Summary:—

SAME DAY.—The Summer Handicap, for all ages; $100 entrance, h f, only $20 if declared; $1,000 added, 1¼ miles.

Time, 4:01¾.

THE THREE-QUARTER MILE DASH.

for all ages, was the last race of the day, and had four starters, viz.: Orlo an Frogtown, Littleton and McDaniels' Australian filly, out of sister to Asteroid. Littleton was the favorite, selling for $540 to pools; Ortolan, $255; Frogtown, $205; Daniels' filly, $165. Ortolan and Frogtown were away first, and the race lay entirely between them, who contested every inch of the ground at a tremendous pace, Ortolan gaining the victory by a length in 1:18¾, which is the fastest time on record for the distance. The favorite was last to get off, and kept in the rear until the finish. Summary:—

SAME DAY.—Purse $400; for all ages, three-fourths of a mile.

Time, 1:16¾.

SECOND DAY, THURSDAY, AUG. 17TH.

TAMMANY WINS THE STEEPLE CHASE—KNIGHT OF ST. GEORGE FILLY THE KENTUCKY STAKES—OUTBACK THE SELLING RACE.

There was no diminution in the attendance on the second day of the meeting, which was as charming, meteorologically speaking, as that of the opening day, the weather supervisor smiling most benignantly upon the gay and fashionable assembly who waited impatiently for the commencement of the races, and enjoyed them so thoroughly. Three events, each and all of an interesting nature, were programmed for the day, and the interim before the time for resuming was, as usual, passed in conjecturing upon the results thereof, the turfites present laying their money or backing their opinions, while amateur sports took their cue from these bright and shining lights, and even the ladies indulged in small wagers of feminine finery and sweetmeats.

THE STEEPLE CHASE

came first, being a handicap for all ages, three miles. There were five starters, viz:—Milesian, King John, Astronomer, Tammany and Tisdale. A first rate send-off was obtained, the first fence being taken in good style by King John and Tisdale in the van. Allaway, the rider of Milesian, was thrown at the second fence, but he quickly resumed his seat, though the lost so much time that it seemed a hopeless task for him to attempt to overhaul the others. Astronomer and Tisdale now held the lead, Tammany next and King John fourth, but Astronomer refusing the next jump, fell to the rear. Tisdale, Tammany and King John cleared the water-jump very cleverly, the others also getting over without accident. Their positions remained unaltered during their second circuit of the course, but arriving at the water jump again, the rider of King John was thrown, fortunately without injury, however. Ere he was mounted again, however, the leaders, with whom he was well up at the time of the accident, were full one hundred yards in front, while Milesian had gone by him and secured the third position by a good distance; thus it became useless for him to attempt to win and so he rode leisurely home. Tammany and Tisdale now became the special objects of interest, and with great determination and gameness did each dispute the ground, the latter running in the lead until after entering the last half mile, which was run on the regular track, when a splendid struggle terminated in Tammany wresting the lead from the bay and finally winning by a couple of lengths, Milesian third. Time, 6:15. Summary:—

SECOND DAY, Aug. 17th.—Steeplechase, handicap for all ages; $300 to the winner, and $200 to the second horse.

Time, 6:15.

THE KENTUCKY STAKES,

for two year olds, one mile, was second on the programme, and had nine starters out of thirty-one entries, their names being as follows:—Esperance Oaks, Mollie McIntyre, Hubbard, Joe Daniels, Frank Swift, Richard's bay filly by Knight of St. George, Hunter & Travers' bay colt, by Eclipse, St. Patrick and Griscioni's grey colt, by Lightning. St. Patrick headed the list in the pool selling, bringing $1,050; Hubbard, $430; Esperance Oaks, $205; Lightning colt, $200; Eclipse colt, $130; Knight of St. George filly, $110; Frank Swift, $40; Mollie McIntyre, $30. The favorite showed in front the moment the signal was given, Joe Daniels next, Oaks 3d, followed by Grinstead's entry, he balance being in a bunch. Daniels and Oaks changed positions are the quarter pole was reached, at which point the Richards filly lapped the latter. Both the latter made the running along the backstretch, Joe taking the lead and the filly second place, a proceeding which caused the backers of the favorite to open their eyes in wonder. Thus they ran until after entering upon the home-stretch, on the latter half of which ensued a struggle between Daniels' and the Richards' filly, ending in the victory being snatched from the grasp of the former when it was regarded as a certainty for him. Time, 1:47¾; won by half a length. Summary:—

THE SELLING RACE,

for all ages, one mile and three-quarters, brought the racing of the day to an end. It had five starters, of which Victory was most fancied, selling in the pools for $330; Outback, $230; Pinery Woods, $200; Precedent, $80. While getting ready for the start Quietard broke away and his jockey was unable to regain command of him until he had made the circuit of the course. Outback dashed off with the lead when the flag dropped, Precedent well up and Quietard next, Victory starting very badly, last of all. Upon entering the regular track Outback held a lead of two lengths, a like distance separating Precedent from Quietard, Victory last. With no difficulty in keeping the lead throughout, increasing it at the end of the mile to six lengths and winning easily by four. Going along the backstretch, on the second mile, Quietard and Precedent were lapped, the latter ahead, but Precedent got away again and won two lengths in front of Quietard at the finish. Time, 3:11¾. Summary:—

SAME DAY.—Selling Race; purse $800; for all ages; one and three-fourths miles; horses entered to be sold for $2,000, to carry their appropriate weights; for $1,800, allowed 7lbs.; for $1,600 10lbs.; or $1,200, 15lbs.; the winner to be sold at auction.

There being no advance on the entered selling price of the winner, $800, when he was put up at auction after the race, he was taken at it to the stable.

THIRD DAY, FRIDAY, AUG. 18TH.

NELLIE JAMES WINS THE THREE QUARTERS OF A MILE HANDICAP, ABDEL KORBE, THE THREE YEAR OLD PURSE, AND ECLIPTIC THE FREE HANDICAP.

The weather continuing beautiful, the course was pronounced with a brilliant concourse of light hearted spectators, and the display of wealth and beauty at the grand stand was perfectly dazzling. The track was in admirable going order, and the races, three in number, were sufficiently exciting to ensure the full enjoyment of all present. The opening event was the

THREE-QUARTER DASH,

a free handicap for all ages, which had five starters, of which Frogtown was the favorite, the following being a synopsis of the pools sold just before the race:—Frogtown, $300; Roselle, $60; Nellie James, $30; Mary Louise, $45; Australian filly, $20. The first named had won a much better favorite previously, but a rumor that he was not actually without foundation—was in circulation during the morning, and had the effect of causing him to fall in the betting. He jumped away with a good lead, Roselle and Nellie two lengths behind, and even byroms, Mary Louise fourth. At the half mile pole the favorite was one same distance before Nellie, who had gained a length on Roselle. No alteration occurred until the stables was reached, when Nellie commenced to diminish the space between her and the leader, and in about fifteen lengths from the stand had beat him in by scant two lengths; Frogtown, being three lengths before Roselle; the others some distance behind. Time, 1:17¾. Summary:—

THIRD DAY, Aug. 18th.—PURSE RACE.—Free Handicap; purse, $400; for all ages; three-fourths of a mile.

A. Belmont entered ch m Nellie James, 4 yrs, by Dollar, dam Fleur de Champ, 100 lbs 1

J. O'Donnell entered gr f Mary Louise, 3 yrs, by Lightning, dam by Sovereign, 87 lbs 0
Time, 1:17¾.

THE THREE-YEAR OLD RACE,

one mile and an eighth, was next, and had three starters. Of these the favorite was Abdel Korbe, selling in the pools $1,800; Tubman, $1,150; John Merryman, $800. They got off together, the favorite having half a length the advantage of Tubman, who was three lengths in advance of Merryman. Tubman improved his position while going along the upper turn, however, and at the quarter pole was an even length with Korbe. Thus they ran for nearly half a mile, while the excited spectators cheered and shouted in the fullness of their delight. Finally, when opposite the three-quarter pole, Tubman forged half a length ahead, and thus swept along the stretch. But now the rider of Korbe spoke upon his horse, and, lengthening the pace, Tubman is caught, forced to resign his lead after a brief struggle, and Korbe dashes under the string three lengths in front, Merryman being a like distance behind Tubman. Time, 1:53. Summary:—

SAME DAY.—Purse $600; for three-year olds; one and one-eighth miles; winners this year of any single race amounting to $1,000, 10 lbs. extra.

D. McDaniels entered ch c Abdel Korbe, 3 yrs, by Australian, dam Reserve, 110 lbs 1

Time, 1:53.

THE FREE HANDICAP,

for all ages, one mile and three quarters, concluded the day's racing in brilliant style. There were four competitors, of which Ecliptic sold for $1,800; Hamburg, $1,225; Frogtown, $180; Cadence $150. As the signal flag dropped Frogtown sprang away in the lead, with Cadence and Hamburg second and third. Ecliptic being the slowest to starting, in getting across the enclosure, before entering the regular track, near the half mile pole, Cadence wrested the lead from Frogtown and was half a length in front of him at that point, the others remaining in the same relative positions as at starting, Hamburg next by Frogtown on the quarter and occupied second place. Cadence being two lengths in front of him as the home-stretch was entered, the rider of Ecliptic being still content to bide his time and remain in the rear. Hamburg cut down the leap between he and the leader just before the mile was completed, Frogtown and Ecliptic being then nose and nose three lengths behind. They continued to run so until nearing the half mile pole, when Hamburg's rider roused him up, and, rapidly closing on the leader, his gon eyes, and they ran the mile and a half amid great excitement Ecliptic and Frogtown four lengths behind. The latter was left to occupy the rear post of honor while going along the lower stretch, although Ecliptic's jockey still held him in. When the distance had been reached, however, he let him out, and coming with a terrific burst of speed, overhauled Hamburg (who was half a length before Cadence) within a few yards of the stand, and defeated him by scarce a head. Time, 3:03¾. Summary:—

THE BRIGHTON STAKES (handicap) of 15 sovs. each, 10 ft, and only 5 if declared, with 100 added; winners extra; the second received 50 sovs. out of the stakes; one mile and three-quarters; 36 subs, 24 of whom declared.

Mr. Brayley's Mornington, by Arthur Wellesley out of Blondella, 3 yrs, 7st 2lb ..... Mordan 1
Lord Aflesbury's Stockpurse, 4 yrs, 7st 8lb ..... Osborne 2
Lord Falmouth's Gertrude, 4 yrs, 8st 6lb ..... T. Chaloner 3

There were six o her starters. Betting.—4 to 1 agst Mornington, 9 to 2 agst Stockpurse, 5 to 1 agst Gertrude, 10 to 1 agst Mellasa colt, 7 to 1 agst Cardigan, and 100 to 12 agst Sideralite. Minotaure's head was in front for a dozen strides, when Stockpurse rushed to the fore, followed by Nona, the Mellasa colt, Violet and Cardigan, with Sideralite lying off behind Gertrude and Mornington. In rising the hill, Nona cannoned against Stockpurse, whose stirrup leather was broken, and she was across the course, but was soon brough back to the rails and turned out of the straight quite clear of Cardigan, the Mellasa colt, Gertrude, Minotaure and Violet, the two last being Mornington and Sideralite. The command of Stockpurse increased rather than diminished, so that at the five furlong post she was quite a dozen lengths ahead of the remainder, who were now in a cluster, headed by the Mellasa colt, Gertrude and Mornington. When they singled out again at the top of the hill the Mellasa colt and Gertrude ran up to the heels of Stockpurse, and were lapped in that way down the hill by Cardigan, who, on the retreat of the Mellasa colt to the bottom, simultaneously with the display of distress signals by Gertrude, closed with Stockpurse, and, holding her safe afterwards, won easily by a length and a half. Twice as far second and third, with the Mellasa colt fourth, Violet fifth, Cardigan sixth, Nona seventh, and Minotaure eighth. Sideralite, who kept company with Mornington all the way to within a quarter of a mile of home, did not pass the post.

THE RIDGEWOOD CUP, 3000 sovs. added for a Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each; three year olds; 7st 10lb; four, 8st 12lb; five, six, and aged 9st 4lb; mares and geldings allowed 4lb; penalties and allowances; the Old Course (about two miles); 20 subs.

Baron Rothschild's Favonius, by Parmesan out of Zephyr, 3 yrs, 8st 3lb ..... Maidment 1
Mr. Lombard's Manille, 3 yrs, 7st 10lb ..... Jeffery 2
Baron Rothschild's Corisande, 3 yrs, 7st 6lb ..... Wells 3
Sir G. Chetwynd's Gourbi, 5 yrs, 9st 4lb ..... French 4
Mr. F. J. Jackson's ch h Lumley, 5 yrs, 9st 4lb ..... Hudson 5

Betting.—5 to 4 on Favonius, 9 to 2 each agst Lumley and Manille, and 50 to 1 agst Gourbi. Corisande jumped away from the start, followed in the order named by Lumley, Gourbi, Favonius, and Manille for a quarter of a mile, when the favorite took second place, and the pace becoming a clipping one, Gourbi fell back into the rear. The mile post Corisande was bringing Favonius along as hard as she could, the Derby winner being half a dozen lengths before Manille with Lumley and Gourbi tailing off, on the last both were as dead as a shower six furlongs from home. Approaching the top of the hill Favonius closed with his stable companion, whom he headed at the turn, and the Baron's two promised to finish first and second into the dip, where Corisande retired, and although the Frenchman got on slightly better terms with Favonius, at last he was beaten in a canter by three lengths; a bad third.

TROTTING MEETING AT KALAMAZOO.

About five thousand spectators were present on the opening day of the Eighth Annual Meeting of the National Trotting Association of Kalamazoo, Mich., Aug. 15th, and the attendance averaged a couple of thousand more on each of the three succeeding days, being considerably augmented on the 18th, owing to the important race, free for all horses, set apart for that date. The only race on the inaugural day was for a purse of $1,500 for horses that had never beaten 2:34. There were eighteen entries and eleven started. Cozeta was the favorite in the pools, and Ed. Foster second choice. The first and second heats were won by Brother Jonathan, the third by Ed Foster, and the fourth and sixth by John Fero. Time, 2:32: 2:31: 2:29¾: 2:29¼: 2:32: 2:35¾.

The sport was resumed on the second day with a running race, two miles and repeat, $1,000, weight for age, which was won by Blink in two straight heats, Regent second. Time, 3:45: 3:46.

The second race was for horses under five years, mile heats, three in five, to harness, premium $1,000, and was won by Golddust in three straight heats. Time, 2:43¾: 2:41 2-5: 2:43 2-5. The next was for double teams and for horses that never trotted for money, $1,000, mile heats, three in five. There were seven entries, and six started. The first heat was won by William Edwards' Cleveland team. Time, 2:46¾. The second, third and fourth heats and race were won by the Pittsburgh team, Emford and Harvie. Time, 2:38¾: 2:37: 2:56 2-5. The second race was for a purse of $3,000, for horses that have never beaten 2:20, mile heats, three in five, to harness, and was won by Sleepy John in three straight heats. Time, 2:30¾: 2:30¾: 2:38¾.

On the third day a race for a purse of $1,500, for horses that had never beaten 2:26, mile heats, to harness, best 3 in 5, started the ball rolling. It was won by Judge Fullerton in three straight heats. Time, 2:31 3-5: 2:32 3-5: 2:33¾. Class No. 7 was a premium of $500, for running horses, mile heats, weight for age, best 3 in 5. The race was won by Simpson's horse Blue Jeon in three straight heats. Time, 1:42 2-5: 1:44 4-5: 1:46 3-5. Class No. 8 was a premium of $1,000, for horses that had never beaten three minutes, mile heats, in harness, 3 in 5. Uncle Abe won the first and second heats. Time, 2:28½: 2:28 3-5. Jumbo Bridgman won the third, fourth and fifth heats, and the race. Time, 2:32: 2:26 3-5: 2:30¾.

The first race on the fourth day was for a purse of $3,500, for horses that had never beaten 2:40, mile heats, 3 in 5, to harness. There were 14 entries. The race was won by Judge Fullerton, in 3 straight heats. Time, 2:36¾: 2: 6 3-5: 2:32. It was followed by a trot for $2,000, for horses that had never beaten 2:30; mile heats, three in five, to harness; five entries. The race was won by Red Cloud in three straight heats. Time, 2:34¾: 2:33 3-5: 2:31 1-5. The last and most interesting race of the meeting was for $6,000, open to all horses; mile heats, three in five, to harness. There were six entries, four started. The race was won by Goldsmith Maid in three straight heats. Lucy was second, American Girl third, and Chicago fourth. Time, 2:26 3-5: 2:22 4-5: 2:26.

TROTTING AT BOSTON.—On Aug. 9th a match for $200, mile heats, best 3 in 5, was decided at Beacon Park, near Boston, Mass., between D. W. Beckler's bay mare Lady Morris, to wagon, and A. W. Worcester's black gelding Ironsides, to harness, the former winning in three straight heats. Time, 2:42¾: 2:44¾: 2:40¾. On the following day Empress, in harness, beat George Maynard, to wagon, at the same course. Time, 2:43¾: 2:38: 2:37¾. A purse of $100 was contested for at Mystic Park on the 11th inst., between 2:38 teams, A. Worcester's Ironsides and Richmond Bay winning the second, fourth and fifth heats and the race. The first heat was dead between them and Rose Standish and Juliet, who won the third heat. Time, 2:44: 2:30¾: 2:42¾: 2:42¾: 2:43

(a) And has now the best of a game equal and conducted with extreme care and great skill.

(b) This is badly judged—probably hastily. He should have avoided the exchange of Queens.

(c) We have now an interesting and instructive position, and a fine end game follows. [But it seems to us as though Herr M. elaborated more than was needful at one or two points.]

PROPOSED COMPETITION BETWEEN FIREMEN.—The Morrisania Fire Department has projected a grand tourney, embracing trial of engines in throwing and running by truck and carriage companies, which is to take place at H. Friedgen's Sylvan Park, foot of Fifth avenue, Morrisania, N. Y., Sept. 14th. The rules are that each engine company shall play out of such sized nozzle as they may elect, through 100 feet of leather hose, being allowed ten minutes for trial, and five minutes additional in case of accident; each carriage and truck company to have twenty-five men, or less, to run one mile, and each carriage company to carry 200 feet of leather hose. The line of march is to leave Mott Haven bridge at 11 o'clock A. M. Invitations have been extended to the departments of different towns, through the chief engineers thereof, by President John Van Horn to participate, and a very interesting competition is expected.

A RELIC.—A short time since, while a party of gentlemen were engaged fishing on the White Loch, at Castle Kennedy, closely adjoining Lord Stair's Castle of Lochinch, Scotland, the draught net brought up a canoe, about twelve feet in length, hewn out of sand oak. It is supposed that the canoe has been submerged for hundreds of years.

GEO. SHELTER, barkeeper at Brewster's Hall, Reading, Pa., says a correspondent, has opened 100 oysters in 6min. 28sec., and 100 clams in 11min. 36sec.

Introductory Opening.

MONDAY, Aug. 21st, 1871.

AUGUST augurs but little good for the theatres, judging from the business of the past three weeks, the excessively warm weather which has characterized that period having a sadly debilitating effect upon those who contribute to the support of our various places of public indoor resort, but with the close of the sultry month through which we are now patiently passing, we may confidently look for a better condition of the public pulse and a corresponding healthy appearance of our managerial corps. [Don't make this corpse, as you did once before, Mr. Printer.—ED.] Everything is in readiness for the fall and winter awakening, and a happy and encouraging revival is looked for. An interesting and highly important question arises, in view of the status of the theatric body, and that is, whether managers and stars will not far outnumber the ranks of the privates in the campaign we are about commencing. Managers come up in a night, and lo! in a day are they stricken down like they have been attacked with colic; nor do they have the satisfaction of knowing that their works do live after them—they are ignominiously forgotten, or, if remembered, are mentioned only in terms of scorn and derision. Stars crop up with astonishing rapidity—they twinkle and coruscate for a brief period and then flicker out like a penny dip in a gale of wind, and become a mere mass of fallen stars. Yet, with the passing away of these ambitious yet unfortunate candidates for dramatic fame, others stand ready, like brave soldiers in battle, to drop into the vacuum created by the decease of their illustrious predecessors, and endeavor to stem the adverse current of popular indignation. Ah, it is a fearful thing to be an actor, especially if the actor cannot crowd the house from cellar to garret, otherwise parquet to dome. It is a fearfuller thing to be an unsuccessful manager without funds—the ghosts of his unpaid fallen braves haunt his every footstep, and the widows and orphans of his many victims rise before him in the silent watches of the night to poison his dreams and sit heavily upon his stomach, like he had supped on lobsters and cucumbers. How few of those embarking upon the uncertain waves of the Thespian current will ever reach the goal of their ambition, while many will go down, water-logged, to the dark caverns of ocean, there to slumber unill the last trump "shall awake them to glory again." But let us not anticipate trouble—rather let us encourage the weary wayfarer in his wanderings, and hope that there is many a ducat in store for the hard-working manager and his toting people, and that they may return to us after many days heavy laden with sheckels of silver and gems of priceless worth.....See over yonder—he's an actor—been enjoying his vacation at the Branch. Observe his woe begone appearance—view with mingled feelings of pity and surprise those mosquito-scarred features, and visage browned with the outpourings of a festering sun. The life seems to have been all taken out of him like he was a dishcloth, and he yearns for the friends of his youth and the soothing words of "my gentle, gentle, mother." When he fell out of banks and brakes in the sand-clad hills of Jersey's seaside shores, he was a heavy man—now he is light and limp as an unaggravated shrimp. Let us turn from the painful picture. In the fancied security of wealthy parents, yonder sweeps along in the pride and circumstance of sweet virgin innocence, a song and dance girl of seventeen, mayhap eighteen, glorious summers. She, too, has just returned from her siesta at Saratoga, where she has been guzzling the sickening waters of life, and driving four-in-hand the youthful worshippers of this species of feminine artificiality. Behold her dauntless stride, as she swings corners, and casts a winsome glance at that unsavory gudgeon who is nibbling at the bait she has thrown out to lure him on to greener pastures. The absentees are fast returning, and Broadway is once again thronged with beauty and fashion of the softer sex and black and tans of the masculine persuasion. Here is the young lady who "dreampt that she dwelt in marble halls, with vassals and serfs at her side," but who awoke from the blissful illusion to find that her two weeks are up, and that she must once more take her seat at the humble sewing machine. And, there, too, sneaking along in the shade of the night, comes the poor and lowly utility man, who, while doing a turn at some rural retreat by a purling stream, as it were, has been studying the life out of him in anticipation of a favorable turn in his affairs during the coming season. See; his means, at no time large, have seen him to his journey's end, but he has to carry home his own trunk, which is "far, far from gay." Each and all bring with them some recollection of their sojourn at the seaside or country house. That happiness and joys, there be, to wander by the restless sea and on its grandeur muse; to tread the firm, unyielding beach, and find, when we our hotel reach, the salt sea's spoiled our shoes; what joy to in the ocean lave, to breast the billow and the wave, and snuff the bracing air; and of the bathing lose the sport, by swallowing water quart by quart, then throw's up in despair. And oh, what bliss to nightly roam with some sweet girl graduate and stone when you're not rich, she hears; and then how soothing, when she's gone, to slumber on the emerald lawn, while bugs crawl in your ears. But when you're recreation's through, and you have settled all bills due—the which you find no joke—what joy you're carpet bag to take, and with telicity to make a break for home dead broke.

.....Yes, everybody is returning home again, and the avenues of commerce and marts of trade—or marts of trade and avenues of commerce, we don't care which—are fast putting on an appearance of activity—which is the harbinger of better times to come. Even "Our Jim" has found it necessary to prepare himself for a hasty return, as may be seen by looking over the following feeling lines from his sympathetic pen. James has not been used well:—

SARATOGA, Orgist twelft, 1871.

City Summary.

MISS LYDIA THOMPSON and her new burlesque company commenced an engagement at Wallack's Theatre on Wednesday evening, Aug. 16th, the house having been closed the two preceding evenings for rehearsals. Although the troupe had been announced to appear on Monday evening, the delay on the passage of the steamship Queen, which bore them to our shores and only arrived on Friday, the 11th inst., rendered it advisable that the opening should be postponed rather than risk a possibly imperfect performance, as the company had never, hitherto, acted together. The day of Wednesday was one of the warmest of the season, and although a brisk shower of brief duration fell about six o'clock the temperature was not immediately reduced. A light rain commenced falling about eight o'clock, accompanied with much lightning, which continued until after midnight. Notwithstanding this unfavorable condition of the elements the theatre, long before the rising of the curtain, was entirely filled, every seat and portion of tae auditorium available for standing room being fully occupied, while hundreds were turned away unable to procure admission. The receipts must have exceeded eighteen hundred dollars. The performance commenced with the farce entitled "Give a Dog a Bad Name," in which Willie Edouin acted Anthony Dearlove; H. Montgomery, Horace Ogie; Miss Hetty Tracy, Carlotta Dearlove, and Miss Tilly Earl, Nancy. Mr. Edouin evidently possesses a keen sense of humor, and his performance created much mirth. He displayed ability that would give him prominence as a comedian in the legitimate drama. Mr. Montgomery acted with gentlemanly ease and created a favorable impression. Miss Hetty Tracy acted with much vivacity and spirit, and Miss Tilly Earl, the soubrette, was pert and mercurial. At the conclusion of the farce Thomas Baker resigned his seat as chef d'orchestre to Michael Connolly, whose appearance was the signal for a hearty outburst of applause. The initiatory music to the burlesque was spirited and terminated with a vocal effort upon the part of the band, who sang a few lines of the latest popular negro refrain of "Carry the News to Mary," which was loudly redemanded and conceded. Immediately thereafter the curtain arose disclosing the opening scene of the bur esque entitled "Blue-Beard; or, The Mormon. The Maiden and The Little Militia're," which was acted with the following cast:—

Blue Beard	Harry Beckett	Said	Kate Egerton
Ibrahim	John Brver	Beda	Nellie Cooke
Fatima	Camille Dubois	Zaida	Lotta Mira
Sorcaster Anne	Carlotta Zerbini	Quaffo	Kate Headon
Selim	Lydia Thompson	Chaffo	Miss Clarke
Corporal Zoug-Zoug	W. Edouin	Laugho	Miss Johnson
Hassan	Hetty Tracy	Raffo	Miss McCormack
The O'Shaughan	H. Montgomery	Plaffo	Miss Roland
Fez	Tilly Earl

The literary part of the burlesque is far superior to the version formerly presented by Miss Thompson. It was splendidly mounted, every scene having been freshly painted therefor, among which we may refer to the village of Bishmillah at sunset, a hall in Blue Beard's castle, all the look-out towers on the castle ramparts, as being excellent specimens of scenic art. The costumes were rich, elegant and tasteful. The members of the new company which Miss Thompson has gathered around her are diametrically opposed in style to those previously associated with her, and, we think, they are destined to become favorites, as their performances are of a higher order of merit. All are twin-sre brunettes, and so far as we can judge, from the early performances, under the circumstances already narrated, they possess sterling talent and ripe experience. The ladies are quiet and modest in demeanor, and neither in appearance nor manner do they appeal to sensuality. They possess shapely figures, good voices, sing well, and their acting is sprightly and vivacious. Miss Thompson, Harry Beckett and Willie Edouin were enthusiastically welcomed upon their first appearance, and a cordial greeting was extended to the strangers. Of the acting Harry Beckett impersonated the character of Blue Beard with much extravagance, grotesqueness and vivacity, and it may be classed among his best efforts. That he is an artist has long since been conceded by the public, and his performances of the past week have enhanced his reputation. The character of Ibrahim, an aged Turk, fell to the lot of John Bryer, who gave it an eccentric make-up and acted it in a manner highly satisfactory. His grotesque dancing was especially commendable and received such endorsement from the audience. Fatima found a graceful representative in Miss Camille Dubois, a lady of medium size with a pretty, expressive face, who displayed much spirit and archness in her acting. Her vocal efforts were lavishly applauded, and several times during the evening she was compelled to repeat her songs. Carlotta Zerbini hardly found the character of Sorcaster Anne suitable to fully display her accomplishments, but had ample opportunity to display her musical abilities throughout the burlesque. She possesses a rich, full voice, evidently cultivated and under good control, and may be pronounced one of the best vocalists of the troupe. A duet, sang by her and Miss Dubois, was one of the gems of the performance and was heartily encored, scarcely a hand being idle in the auditorium. As Selim, Miss Lydia Thompson bounded upon the stage amid most enthusiastic and prolonged applause, and a shower of floral tributes attested the strong hold she has upon the public. She appeared much refreshed by her trans-atlantic trip, and acted with all the spirit, fleetness and elan which are marked characteristics of her performances. During the evening, an opportunity was afforded her for several changes of costume; the one worn in the third scene, that of a shepherd, serving to enhance her personal attractions. In this scene she, with Mr. Beckett, sang "If Ever I Cease to Love," with topical allusions, which were given alternately by either artist, and aroused the audience to a positive furore. They were recalled many times. During this scene Miss Thompson sang "His Heart was True to Poll," from the burlesque of "Poll and Partner Joe," which was acted with much success at the St. James' Theatre, London, Eng., during the past season. It was very comically rendered, and may be pronounced the success of the evening. She was recalled four times. In addition to these songs a plentiful amount of music fell to her share throughout the burlesque, to which we need not make present reference. Willie Edouin created much hilarity by his grotesque acting of Corporal Zoug-Zoug. He walked with a gait which defies description, but which convulsed the audience with laughter. In the third scene he was introduced as a Heathen Chinee, which he personated in an excellent manner, singing a Chinese song, and performing a Chinese grotesque dance which met with great favor, being thrice re-demanded. He also, with Beckett, presented in a realistic manner the celebrated game of euchre played by Ah Sin, as described by Bret Harte, which was rapturously received. His ping bang made of India rubber, became the vehicle of likewise creating much mirth. Miss Hetty Tracy, a blonde, played Hassan in a sprightly manner, and at the initial performance, as she entered upon the scene she was mistaken for Miss Thompson, enthusiastically welcomed and showered with floral tributes. However, the mistake was quite natural, as, when seen apart, the resemblance between them is strong, which is the best description we can give of the lady. Her musical efforts were received with favor. The Fez-zabaloo, an Irish page in buttons, was well acted by H. Montgomery. Miss Kate Egerton acted Said quite acceptably, and the same may be said of Miss Nellie Cooke as Beda. Miss Tilly Earl, as Fez, made a very captivating looking officer, and the Misses Lotta Mira and Kate Heathcote did full justice to the small characters assigned them. Among the incidental music we may mention as deserving especial commendation, the "Ande of Queen Bess," "Up in the Mormon Land" and the "Mandolin Song," at the close of scene second. The burlesque is in five scenes and acted in two hours and a quarter at the early representations. During the entire week the attendance continued very large. We are credibly informed that it is the intention of the management, no matter how great the success that attends any one burlesque, to produce a constant succession of novelties during the present engagement at least three burlesques will be produced. As a matter of record we append the names of those artists who made their American debut upon August 16th. The Misses Camille Dubois, Carlotta Zerbini, Hetty Tracy, Tilly Earl, Kate Egerton, Nellie Cooke, Lotta Mira, Messrs. John Bryer and H. Montgomery. It will be seen that the present organization possesses one great advantage over Miss Thompson's former company—that it is complete. With the assistance of a few ballet and chorus girls can perform in any theatre without requiring the assistance of a dramatic company. "Blue Beard" is announced for continued representation, and on and after this evening, August 21st, will be presented in two acts, owing to the introduction of many novelties, and will constitute the entire evening's entertainment.

AT WOOD'S MUSEUM a melodrama entitled "A Life's Revenge," in which George C. Boniface acted the leading role, was performed on the first four evenings of the past week to large audiences. On Friday a change of bill occurred and Mr. Boniface took his farewell benefit. The plays presented were "Don Cæsar de Bazan" and the "Game Cock of the Wilderness." In the former Mr. Boniface acted the title role with vigor and dash and won the hearty approbation of a good-sized audience. Frank Evans' portraiture of King Charles II. was dignified, natural and easy. Miss Josie Gosstin dazzled in a natural manner the villainies of the wily minister of state, Don Jose. G. C. Charles created considerable merriment by his humorous acting of the old Marquis de Rotondo. Miss Alice Atherton made a charming Lazarillo, and is making rapid strides in her profession, being very attentive to business and exerting herself to please. Messrs. Lewis, Stewart, Dow and Willard were attentive to the business of the minor parts. Miss Gussie de Forest was cast for Maritana, but apparently lacked the necessary stage appearance to render the impersonation effective; still credit is due the lady for her conscientious efforts in that direction. Mrs. Kate Rynar was very efficient as the Countess de Rotondo. The "Game Cock of the Wilderness" as an old time melo-drama, needs no further comment than to say that, as a whole, it was well performed. The same bill was repeated on the afternoon and evening performance of Saturday. During the usual matinees, "Meg's Diversion" and "My Son Diana" were performed, with Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Hall in the leading characters. This evening, August 21st, Miss Ada Harland, a popular actress, will commence an engagement, appearing in a new sensational drama written expressly for her by Frederick G. Maeder, entitled "Legend of Life, love and adventure in South America, on the plains of the west and in Paris under the commune, and entitled "Lola," in which Miss Harland will play Lola, the Will o' the Wisp.

AT BOOTH'S THEATRE, Lotta played in "Little Nell and the Marchioness" during the past week. The opening house was very large, but the business fell off immediately thereafter, and one or two nights of the week the attendance was quite limited.

AT KIRLY'S GARDEN the fall and winter season will be inaugurated this evening, August 21st. "Fritz, our Cousin German" will be the opening play, in which J. K. Emmet will act his original character of Fritz, the German emigrant.

THE SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS are announced to commence their season on August 28th.

W. H. WHALLEY commenced an engagement at Tony Pastor's on August 14th, appearing on this and Tuesday evenings in a sensational drama, entitled the "Black Band." On Wednesday evening "Damon and Pythias" was substituted, which gave place, on Thursday, to the "Dark Hour Before the Dawn" and "Ivan the Hammer." On Friday, for Mr. Whalley's benefit, the "Three Red Men" and "Sick of the Woods," with an olio of performance, in which several volunteers appeared, were rendered, and also repeated on Saturday evening, the closing night of Mr. Whalley's engagement. This evening, August 21st, Sam Ryan, a comedian who enjoys considerable popularity on this side of the town, commences an engagement.

JAMES PORTER, business manager of the Brooklyn Opera House, Brooklyn, L. I., also of Metropolitan Hall, Washington, D. C., was married at the Devos House, in this city, on August 15th, to Miss Blanche De Vere.

KELLY AND LEON'S MINSTRELS were particularly benefitted during the early portion of the past week by the closing of the Broadway theatres, their hall being the only place of amusement open on Broadway below Twenty-third street. The auditorium was densely crowded on Monday and Tuesday evenings, and well filled on the balance of the week. Little novelty was presented, but considerable is announced for this week. Signor F. Flowers, gymnast, will make his first appearance, and the entire first part will be occupied by an entertainment entitled "A Trip Around the World," which, although by no means new, will have the charm of novelty, as it has not been presented in this city for some time. The entire olio throughout will be re-written and adapted to suit the present time. In the second part Leon will sing "Sweetest of Williams" and the "Tipsy Song," and Don Pedro Dorrego will perform upon three guitars at the same time, assisted by his pupil, Charles Sterne, on a fourth. A musical burletta, entitled the "Two Doves," will be performed for the first time in four years, and a familiar farce will close the programme. Thomas Sully and Henri Sturt are announced to appear Aug. 28th.

AT THE BOWERY THEATRE, "Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl," was acted throughout the past week to good sized audiences. On Friday a change of bill occurred Edouin were enthusiastically welcomed upon their first appearance, and a cordial greeting was extended to the strangers. Of the acting Harry Beckett impersonated the character of Blue Beard with much extravagance, grotesqueness and vivacity, and it may be classed among his best efforts. THE SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS are announced to commence their season on August 28th.

THE FALL AND WINTER SEASON at the Walnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia, commenced on Monday evening, the 14th inst., under most favorable auspices, judging from the manner in which Boucicault's new drama of "Elfie" was mounted, and the efficiency of the company engaged in its representation. During the summer vacation the exterior of the theatre has been thoroughly cleaned, re-painted and decorated, and, clean and bright in aspect, now presents the additional advantage of having a portion of the space formerly occupied by the musicians now set apart for seats. The drama of "Elfie," which was produced for the first time in Philadelphia on the evening of the 14th inst., proved to be quite attractive, to which the interesting nature of the plot—already given in these columns—the excellent acting of all concerned, and the admirable scenic effects introduced, each contributed their share. Miss Effie Germon, who received a hearty recognition on her re-appearance before a Philadelphia audience, was especially engaged to assume the character of Elfie, and stood out in agreeable prominence, and by her lively and spirited acting she ensured for herself symptoms of approval of the most unequivocal character. The part of Joe Chirrup afforded Mr. Charles Fisher an opportunity for the display of some of that finished style of character acting with which his name has long been inseparable. Mr. Charles Wheatleigh, to whom the part of Sadiove was entrusted, depicted that character with artistic ability. The part of the miser, Flint, was well delineated by Mr. W. A. Chapman, whose acting throughout showed a just conception of a rather difficult role. Mrs. Lewis Morrison gave a very finished dramatic rendering of the part of Bob Evans, and the remainder of the cast was well sustained. The play was in every respect admirably mounted, and will occupy the stage until the 28th inst., when Andrew J. Halliday's romantic drama of "Amy Robsart" will be produced for the first time in America.

AT SANBORN AND BLOUGH'S OPERA HOUSE, Philadelphia, Mr. J. H. Roberts, the tragedian, was announced to play a week's engagement, opening on the 14th inst., in "Belphegor," but business proving bad, the management cancelled the engagement, and on the 17th inst., and the balance of last week, the stock company appeared in standard pieces. Miss Rose Goodall had a benefit on the 17th inst., when the "Willow Copse" was produced to a fair audience. On Friday evening, the 18th inst., "Oliver Twist" was produced, and on Saturday evening the season concluded with a benefit to Mr. Joseph E. Nagle. "La Tour De Nesle" forming the piece de resistance on this occasion. This establishment during the present week will be thoroughly cleaned and re-decorated in time for the opening night of Simmons and Slocum's Minstrels

CINCINNATI THEATRICALS are given by our correspondent, dated Aug. 18th, as follows:—"There has been a change in the opening night of Pike's Opera House, under Mr. Ford's management, which will take place on September 18th, instead of Oct. 2d, as originally intended. Joe Jefferson opens the season as the star, playing two weeks, and will be followed by Johannachek, for one week, and then Jane Coombs will be the next attraction, commencing on Oct. 9th, and continuing two weeks. Theo. Thomas and orchestra will occupy the theatre for one week, beginning the 30th of October. Parepa Rosa's opera troupe commence on Nov. 27th, for one week. Besides these, J. W. Wallack, Maggie Mitchell, and perhaps Lester Wallack, are to be here also, as dates for 1872 are already filled, are still several weeks not provided for. All the dramatic stars will have supporting companies to travel with them. Mr. Ford's business manager in this city is William T. King, formerly local editor of the Daily Chronicle.....Wood's Theatre opens on the 4th of September. It will be closed until then, after this week, for refitting. The new company will probably be the strongest ever played in this city, embracing seventeen gentlemen and about fifteen ladies. Mrs. Rachel Johnson Macauley will play leading business in support of male stars; Mary Davenport, leading juvenile; Charlotte Crampton, leading heavy; Fanny Prestage, comedy; Emma Salisbury, chambermaids; Mrs. C. P. Salisbury, old women; Imogene Kent; the Misses Harris, Smith, Collins and Leonard; B. Macauley, J. E. Whiting and H. A. Weathersbee, juvenile; Mr. Churchill, low comedy; Mr. Russell, R. E. Griffith, H. E. Mehen, W. T. Johnson, H. C. Barton, George Dixon, C. Wilkinson, F. Vickers, C. Waite, G. Howard and J. Radcliff. C. W. Coudock will be the opening star and 'The Willow Copse' the opening play. R. C. Grierson is to be stage manager; H. E. Mehen, prompter, and L. Malmsha, scenic artist."

DRAMATIC AFFAIRS IN BOSTON, MASS., are reported as follows by our regular correspondent under date of Aug. 19:—"As usual, the first to open its doors for the new season was the Boston Museum, which on Monday evening last began—with a performance of 'Town and Country'—its 29th regular season. The evening was rather warm and the attractions elsewhere strong, but nevertheless the audience was very large and appreciative. The auditorium has been little changed, except that it has been painted and frescoed a little, and it presents the same homelike, cozy appearance as of old, the one thing wanting now is a change in the numbering of seats in the parquet circle. The comedy of 'Town and Country' needs little comment, as it is an old and favorite play here. It served to introduce one or two new candidates for favor, and of them only is it necessary to speak. J. W. Blaisdell comes to us from Chicago, and if one can judge by his impersonation of Hastie, he is likely to prove a valuable acquisition. His rather quiet manner, dresses well, has a good stage presence and a good voice, all of which are valuable aids. Susie Cluer appeared as Rosalie Somers, and made a very good impression. It is some years since she was last in Boston. During her absence she has made great progress in her profession, and, by doing everything as well as she did Miss Somers, she is likely to prove a great favorite. J. A. Smith was warmly welcomed on his first entrance, proving that he has not lost any popularity during his absence in San Francisco. The favorites of last year—Warren, Barron, McClanam, Hardenburgh, Miss Clarke, Mrs. Vincent and Josie Batchelder—all came in for their share of applause, and the evening was thoroughly enjoyable. Excellent music by the new orchestra, under the management of E. N. Catlin, was furnished, and the stage management of Mr. Grahame was certainly all that could be desired. 'Town and Country' was repeated on Tuesday, and on Wednesday afternoon and evening 'Caste' served to introduce Laura Phillips and J. H. Ring, both of whom were warmly received. On Thursday the 'Heir at Law' was given, and last night 'She Stoops to Conquer,' which is being repeated this afternoon. On Monday, the second week opens with 'Old Oaks,' followed, on Tuesday, by Bob 'Pounced,' on Wednesday, on 'Somebody in the Toils,' and on Thursday by 'She Stoops to Conquer.'.....At the Boston Theatre Joseph Proctor's engagement has proved remarkably successful for this time of the year, his audiences being quite large. 'Nick of the Woods' has formed the bill every evening except Friday. The applause was as spontaneous as though this was the first time the play had been given, and the interest, enthusiasm, as Yeadon remarked, with which Proctor ought to feel flattered by the reception accorded his efforts, which proved conclusively that he has a strong hold upon the hearts of our people. At his benefit, on Friday evening, he enacted Ethelwold in 'Ambition,' playing the role in splendid style, and meeting with unqualified success. His admirers turned out in full force, as was the case when he filled with an interested and appreciative audience, who rewarded him with a hearty round of applause, the fact that he starts on Wednesday next for California adding to the interest. 'Ambition'

Guest. At Wall's, Johnny Allen, G. D. Byron and others having sensational pieces will appear during the season."

HARRY CLIFFORD, the comedian, has been engaged for the coming season at the Park Theatre, Brooklyn, L. I., under the management of Messrs. Carrol and McCloskey. He has obtained from them, however, a congé of four weeks, during which time he will act Knucklebone Johnny in "Across the Continent," under H. G. Clarke's management, in the New England circuit.

MRS. Dawn Howard, who made her debut at Wood's Museum, this city, last spring, as Mrs. Fairweather in the "Garden of New York," desires an engagement for the fall and winter season. Her address is care of this office.

J. S. DELANEY, comedian and character actor, from the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, advertises for an engagement.

Musical.

SUICIDE OF AN OPERATIC ARTISTE.—Miss Amelia Garcia, who for three or four successive seasons won much applause upon the lyric stage in New Orleans, La., committed suicide in that city some time during the first week in August. About two years since she retired from the stage to private life, having become passionately enamored of a gentleman of that city, and for his sake abandoned whatever of fame and prospect of advancement she might have had in her profession. Whenever she appeared upon the streets or in places of public amusement she was the cynosure of every eye. At length it began to be whispered about that her life was not happy. Society has its observances which must not be neglected, and the lady became convinced that she could not retain an allegiance which society would not countenance. The conviction came at last and she resolved to die. On the morning when the separation took place, it is said that she ordered her servant to go to the drug store and bring her some laudanum. The servant, suspecting her design, refused to do so, and with tears and entreaties endeavored to dissuade her from her rash design. She then went herself, and under some unknown pretence procured it, took it and died. The residents of the neighborhood say that at about the time the poison must have commenced its fatal work she seated herself at the piano, and for more than an hour played and sang. Her rich, thrilling voice, rising to its full compass, revelled in the sweetest music they had ever heard. Strains of passionate sorrow mingled with the sorrowful cadence of a funeral dirge as the dying cantatrice sang her life away. She was young, lovely, brilliant and accomplished, and won admirers by the score, and in the height of her fame was the most sought after and the acknowledged beauty of her profession in that city. At the time of her death she was a little over 23 years of age. She was a native of the West Indies, her father being a Spanish creole and her mother a German Jewess. Her parents came to New York when she was quite young, and she here commenced her musical career. She sang one season at the Academy of Music and one or two engagements at other theatres. The news of her death was not publicly known in New Orleans until some two weeks after it had occurred.

MISS NANNIE WOOD gave a concert at Natchez, Miss., Aug. 10th, assisted by Miss Lunn, Mrs. Dr. Welden, pianist, and Messrs. Winchester, Henderson and Lecand.

FRED. BAKER, leader of orchestra, advertises for an engagement.

OLE BULL is suffering from inflammation and partial congestion of the brain, and his illness is considered dangerous. His physicians have forbidden him to perform in public, and consequently his proposed tour through the west and south during the approaching season will be abandoned. He was able, on August 18th, to be removed from his residence at West Lebanon, Me., to the Isle of Shoals, New Hampshire.

VAL ROLOWSKI advertises that he can furnish a brass and string band for the coming season.

HENRY EVERTON, character vocalist, who can be addressed care of this office, is prepared to accept engagements after Sept. 18th.

MUSICIANS are wanted for James Robinson's Circus. Address as per advertisement.

A VIOLIN which took a prize medal at the Paris Exposition is advertised for sale in another column.

Variety Halls.

THE VARIETIES THEATRE, Pittsburgh, Pa., under the management of Fred. Sims, with Mr. Fitz Simmons, stage manager, opened for the fall and winter season of 1871-72 on August 14th, concerning which our correspondent wrote as follows on the 18th inst:—"The house was crowded, notwithstanding the weather was intensely hot. The little theatre now presents an inviting and comfortable interior, the auditorium and gallery having been repainted, the entire house thoroughly cleaned and the stage furnished with new scenery and properties. A list of the company we published in a past issue. The Herdandee party was billed to appear, but owing to adverse circumstances, was unable to arrive. Mlle. Mazzerie is the principal danseuse, and her dancing is marked with ease, grace and celerity. Mlle. Leah, also a danseuse, has made a good impression. Millie Lone's songs (although not all new) are given with a vivacity and originality of style that renders them more than usually attractive. She is pretty and sprightly. Celie Herd gives us many new songs and sings with pleasing effect. Mlle. Geraldine and Mons. Leopold are excellent gymnasts. Their trapeze act is nightly hailed with lavish applause. Walter Bray received a most cordial welcome. His song of 'Carry the News to Mary' is received with demonstrations of delight, and everything he attempts is accomplished with a nicety and fidelity that stamps him a capital negro comedian. Johnny Queen's songs and dances are always encored. There is something exceedingly neat and fresh in everything this gentleman does. Ed. Banker's changes from black to white, and from white to black face, are among the marvelous features of the programme. The act is justly applauded. Hen. Mason, as a character vocalist, is a success. His changes are complete and made with surprising rapidity. His costumes are elaborate and his make up unexceptionable. Harry Stanwood manipulates a banjo artistically and sings very well. Three and four encores are accorded him nightly. Joe Lang is a clever comedian. His songs and dances are creditable performances. The company is a talented one, and under the management of Fitz Simmons, works to admirable advantage. The attendance has been good during the week. Andy McKee, song and dance artist, is announced to appear on the 21st."

E. CASTELLO'S SENSATION COMBINATION exhibited at Orono, Me., August 12th. Among the performers were:—E. Castello, magician; the Clifton Brothers, Harry, Charles and James, acrobats and gymnasts; Ned Gardner, Ethiopian comedian, and Master James, jig dancer.

TONY PASTOR and his variety company are billed to perform at Johnstown, Pa., September 4th; Altoona, 5th; Harrisburg, 6th, and Trenton 7th, closing their season with the latter performance, as the company will open in New York for the regular season on the 11th.

LON CHAPIN'S VARIETY THEATRE, Scranton, Pa., was opened for the season August 15th, with the following company:—Lon Chapin, banjo; Frank Clifton, bones; Ali. Miles, interlocutor; John Rodgers, the Misses Lydia Webster, Maggie Mairs, Victoria Ross, Millie Henrietta and Emma Jackson. Tom Hampton and wife are announced to appear on the 21st.

J. E. GREEN AND GEORGE S. S. WALLACE have leased the Rink Mont-Royal, at the village St. Jean Baptiste, a suburb of Montreal, C. E., which they are running as a variety theatre. The following performers are in the company:—J. E. Green, the Misses Jenny Eagan, dansease; Janette Ross, song and dance; Adele le Farran, serio comic; Mattie Allston, balladist; Lottie Lavelle, protean vocalist; Charley Burnham, bones; Jimmy Emmerson, tambo; Johnny Bartley, bone and tambo soloist; Peter Kent, trapeze and wire walker; Mons. Champagne, clog; stage manager, J. E. Green; rink director, Charles Burnham, and leader of orchestra, James J. Cook.

MONS. DE LAVE, with Lilla and Zoe, are rusticating at Lachine, near Montreal, C. E.

THE THIRD STREET OPERA HOUSE, Philadelphia, Pa., will be opened on Sept. 2d. Performers are wanted. See advertisement.

CHAS. ARIZONA, balancer, etc., and Minnie Wa Wa, gymnast, can be engaged. Their address is care of this office.

CARROLL'S WALNUT STREET THEATRE, Kansas City, Mo., is to be opened for the season, Aug. 28th, with an entirely new company.

AT THE BROOKLYN OPERA HOUSE, Brooklyn, L. I., the following ladies and gentlemen will comprise a portion of the company for the ensuing season, which is to commence Sept. 2d:—James Wilson, burlesque actor; Matt Wheeler, clog; Charley Benedict and George Thatcher, comedians; Turner and Leslie, song and dance; Master George, juvenile clog; Ada Stewart, jig; Blanche De Vere, Vocalist; Minnie Gray, dancer and vocalist; Jennie de Mars, vocalist; and Clara May, burlesque actress; sole proprietor, B. Henze; business manager, James Porter, and stage manager, E. D. Gooding.

TALENT is wanted for Lon Chapin's Variety Theatre, Scranton, Pa. See advertisement.

THE FALL AND WINTER SEASON at the new Philadelphia Varieties, Tenth and Callowhill streets, Philadelphia, will be inaugurated on Saturday evening, the 26th inst. During the short vacation, a considerable sum seems to have been expended in the alteration and improvement of this place, the decorator's taste and the artist's brush having been brought into liberal requisition, and the aspect of the interior—thanks to the recent embellishments—is much brighter than formerly. The orchestra has been much improved by the substitution of comfortable chairs in the place of those formerly used, and additional space has been gained in the orchestra circle by the removal of the restaurant to the back of the auditorium. The company engaged for the opening night includes the Freeman Sisters, Miss Lucy Clifton, Emma Bruce, Lida Wells, Sam Devere, Charley Reynolds, H. W. Williams, Billy Barry, and Mons. Baptiste, in addition to several other first-class performers whom the managers are now engaged in negotiating for. The stage management will continue to be, as heretofore, under the supervision of Mr. H. W. Williams.

At the Philadelphia, Philadelphia, the attendance during the week ending the 19th inst. was fair. The programme presented included as the most attractive features, the Female Minstrels; Tommy Turner in banjo solos; Fatlie Stewart in his burlesques, entitled "That Dorg" and "Faint Heart Can't Win;" Miss Emma Alford in her popular and piquant serio-comic songs; Murphy and Egbertin very well executed song and dances; and Sidney Franks in his comic vocalism, which meets with much applause. C. L. Davis, in his lightning changes, was the only new face during the week. Miss Emma Alford and Mr. Sidney Franks concluded their engagement at this establishment on the 19th inst., and the present is announced as the last week of Murphy and Egbert, two good song and dance men. Miss Amy De Brent, serio comic vocalist, and Billy Lanning and Morris Heppard, song and dance men, open here on the 21st inst.

FROM CINCINNATI we have the following variety news up to the 18th inst., through our correspondent:—"Tony Pastor's traveling party are drawing fine audiences at Wood's Theatre this week, notwithstanding some very warm weather, their opening house being a jam. It looks a little as though the people are hungry for amusements, all the traveling troupes having done well here this summer. The programmes have been changed once or twice, but bear the same general features, opening with an Ethiopian sketch by Johnny Wild, Frank Karns and Frank Girard, whose efforts in the comic way are quite successful; then comes Carleton in his excellent Irish songs and dances, succeeded by Delehanty and Hengler in their double songs and dances, which always make a telling hit. One thing they do, particularly well, and that is a take off on beginners in the song and dance line. Ada Wray's songs and banjo solos are next, and her pretty face and artless ways win everybody but the very critical; Kitty O'Neil's jig follows, and, though a little lengthy, is good; then comes Charles Walters with what he calls a song and dance, the dancing consisting of extraordinary somersaults and contortions. He makes a big hit. Tony Pastor's budget of comic songs are next on the list, and Tony has hard work to get off the stage, owing to encores. Another farce follows, with Jennie Gilmer in the lady part, and then Annie Hindle gives her changes and character songs. She made a good impression at the National last winter, and is well received. Delehanty and Hengler re-appear in Senegambian gambols, and Carleton and Jennie Gilmer, and Pastor and Ada Wray in duets, after which Mr. Fenler, the 'talking hand' man, gives his celebrated exhibition of ventriloquism, the programme closing with a farce, in which Girard, Wild, Karns, Ada Wray, Jennie Gilmer and Kitty O'Neil figure to advantage. Taken either individually or collectively, the party is a strong one, and serves the audience it has met with. The route ahead of the company is:—Richmond, Ind., Monday 21st; Dayton, 22d; Springfield, 23d; Columbus, 24th and 25th; Zanesville, 26th, and then homewards. They open in New York, for the fall season, Sept. 11th....The Olympic Theatre, of whose opening I made mention last week, continues to do a very fair business, and the company takes well. Sullivan, Warfield and Wilkinson, in their comedian lines, are very successful, as well as Miss Augusta in songs and dances, and Annie Vernon in her ballads. Besides those mentioned last week there are now playing here, Smith Fox, whose forte is Dutch songs; Miss Gertrude, a jiggist; Miss Louise Mace; Master Willy, song and dance boy, and Alfred Roland, accordeon soloist.....At the Race Street Varieties M. A. Griffin appeared this week, taking the place of Marsh Adams, gone off with Eyman's Minstrels. He does end business and a song and dance. The rest of the company remains pretty much as at last change.....Several parties are organizing to attend the different county fairs. Tim Woodruff has one, with which he is to open at Newcastle, Ind., on the 21st. Besides himself, he has Sam and Johnny Stout, M. A. Griffin, Bob Crandall, Dick Irwin, and will probably add one or two more. Another party is to open at Washington Court House, Ohio, on the 23d, under the management of Sherwood & Co., the performers to be Sherwood, Harry Wilkinson, Master Willy, Prof. Henri and wife, and Miss Lizzie Johnson. Each party will also have an orchestra."

HARLETON, characteristic vocalist, and Annie Maggie and la petite Delmar, character vocalists and dancers, can be engaged through Riggs & Fitzgerald.

ADELINE FONTAINEBLEAU, gymnast and ceiling walker, with specialties, can be engaged from the middle of November through her agent, Harry Cunningham.

SMITH'S OPERA HOUSE, East Saginaw, Mich., wrote our correspondent on August 16th, "is in a flourishing condition. The people for the week were as follows:—Oscar Willis, stage manager; vocalists, Lottie Hamilton, Nellie Edwards, Eva Buchner and Carrie Wharfe; dansease and jig dancer, Kittie Le Roy and Augusta Lamereaux. The gentlemen of the party, in addition to Willis, are George Kurtz, Fred. Benton and Charley Worley. New stars appear twice a week and the house is making money. Lizzie Sherman, vocalist, and Harry Watson, Ethiopian comedian, are billed to appear on Aug. 24th. Business is reported as good there, and first class female talent is wanted."

FRANK WILD'S OPERA HOUSE, Syracuse, N. Y., opens Monday evening Aug. 28th, with a large and excellent company. Among the names for the opening are Andy McKee, K. V. Furguson, Norman Shimer and G. W. Jester.

THE METROPOLITAN THEATRE, Indianapolis, Ind., is still as attractive as ever under the management of Gen. Gebert and C. M. Mack. Mlle. Gracie is the new face this week and charms every one with her excellent rendering of comic songs. W. C. Burton and Minnie Rainforth, in their double lightning Zouave drill, are underlined. So writes our correspondent, "Vagrantes."

SIDNEY FRANKS, comic vocalist, and Emma Alford, soto-comic vocalist, commence an engagement at the St. James Theatre, Boston, Mass., on Sept. 4th, where they can be addressed.

THERE WERE NO CHANGES in the company at the Metropolitan Hall, Washington, D. C., last week, save the addition of Miss Kitty Rowell, a handsome brunette of petite figure, and an excellent vocalist. In the first part she sang a very pretty song called "Snow White Blossoms," never before sung here. Geo. Thatcher sang a very comical end song, but the selections offered by Minnie Clare and Maggie Nichols were worn, and only moderately well sung. In the olio Neil Conway appeared in his wonderful clog dance, and, toward the close of the performance, he performed a reel, which was immensely enjoyed by the audience. Stage Manager Porter is absent in Brooklyn making preparations for the opening of the opera house there, and Geo. Thatcher is stage manager pro tem. here, and will be until the return of Mr. Porter. Mr. Gaynor's banjo solos are appreciated, excepting one or two, which contain sentiments of a character not likely to please a miscellaneous audience. On one occasion last week he was soundly hissed when he sang one of the songs in question, and I would advise him to drop it from his repertoire altogether. The song alluded to is entitled "He Never Lost his Grip." So wrote our correspondent "Novice" on August 20th.

THE VARIETIES, Peoria, Ill., during the past week, wrote our correspondent, on Aug. 18th, has done a remarkably good business. Mr. Metzeideld is doing all he can to please the patrons of his theatre. Since my last, two new people, the Clark Bros., Harry and John, double trapeze and iron jaw, have been engaged for two weeks, and appeared on Saturday, the 15th inst. Their acts are all very difficult and well performed. Miss Adelia Smith closes her engagement with this week, 19th. She is good in her line, and has given satisfaction during her stay; la belle Pauline, in her specialties, lightning changes, songs, and dances, is remarkably good for one so young, and her stage manner is natural. Miss Ida Marion, in her character dances, is nightly received with vociferous cheers. Miss Estelle, in her German songs, continues a great favorite; Thompson, Murphy, and Blood, in their specialties, are well received, and their performances are good throughout. Mr. Griffin closed his engagement on the 12th, and went to St. Louis. Mme. Gracie, a female gymnast, has been engaged, and will open on Aug. 21st for two weeks.

MISS JENNIE JEROME, vocalist, and Mlle. Emma, dansease, were the only new faces that appeared at Fitzgerald's Varieties, Buffalo, N. Y., during the past week.

AT SHELBY'S COMIQUE, Buffalo, N. Y., the manager, Dan Shelby, makes his first appearance this evening, Aug. 21st, upon which date R. A. Brink, tragedian, makes his first appearance, and Miss Jessie Howard a re-appearance.

ARI HOLSTON, female impersonator, is favorably noticed by a Bay City, Mich., journal, as will be seen by an extract in another column. His address is care of this office.

THE SANTERAHS—Samuel and Maude—gymnasts, can be addressed through Col. T. A. Brown. Samuel Sanyeah states that he will be at liberty for five weeks from the 23d of next January.

SONG AND DANCE LADIES are wanted by Edwin Blair, who advertises.

AT JOHN DENIER'S NOVELTY THEATRE, Titusville, Pa., the fresh attraction announced for August 21st is the New York Female Minstrel Company, consisting of Jennie and Estella Hyams, Maggie Loretta, Lottie May, Millie La Fontaine, Ella Clayton, Charley Benedict, S. R. Orme, F. A. McDonald and George Donald.

JOHNNY MULLIGAN opened at the Brooklyn Olympic, on Aug. 21st, in "Brian O'Lynn" and other burlesque minstrel specialties. Last week the Olympic had fair houses, the Zitella troupe and a host of other variety talent being the attraction.

THE GLOBE THEATRE, Brooklyn, opens on Aug. 21st, under the management of Charley White, with a large company of variety performers.

THE OLYMPIC THEATRE, CHICAGO, ILL., says our correspondent, continues to meet with public approval and good patronage. The new faces consist of Kittie Henderson, Lulu Cullum and George Moore, all of whom are strong acquisitions. Among the established favorites may be mentioned Josie Wally, Viola Clifton, Helen Revere, Bowman and Harris, Frank Frayne and Fernando Fleury. The present week's bill is replete with new and finely sung ballads, fancy dances, double songs and dances, negro acts, etc. Bowman and Harris are up for a benefit this evening, Aug. 18th.

Negro Minstrelsy.

SIMMONS AND SLOCUM'S MINSTRELS, having completed their successful traveling tour, will inaugurate their second season at the Arch Street Opera House, Philadelphia, on the evening of the 28th inst. This troupe met with great success during their first season at this new and handsomely fitted-up edifice, and the liberal patronage then bestowed has the effect of causing the management to make renewed efforts to retain the hold thus gained on the favor of the public, and with this object in view, the company has been strengthened in every department, as will be seen by the following list:—Comedians, Lew Simmons, E. N. Slocum, Harry Lehr, Pete Lee, Robert Fraser; quintet, Harry Norman, tenor; John Crosher, tenor; Wm. Hamilton, baritone; Chas. Stevens, alto; and Jos. Norris, bass; W. Welch and J. Rice, song and dance men; Justin Robinson, female impersonator; instrumental, John S. Cox; musical director and flutist, Eddie Fox; first violin, W. H. Blakeny; second violin; Frank Shaefer; viola, John S. Paul; double bass, Signor Jose Garatagie; first cornet, Mons. Didier, second cornet; F. A. Ternet, J. J. Joell, clarionet. In addition to the above named another celebrated comedian has been negotiated with, and a trombone player and a fine tenor vocalist, will also appear with the company. E. Sesone will continue to act as treasurer, and W. S. Fox as the superintendent of the Opera House.

SAM SANFORD'S new opera house, North Second street, Philadelphia, will be opened for the regular fall and winter season on Saturday evening, the 26th inst. During the summer recess the auditorium has been altered and enlarged, and a new parquet and orchestra constructed. The company engaged will comprise most of the old favorites.

UNSWORTH'S MINSTRELS, comprising Unsworth, Eugene, and G. W. H. Griffin, open at Paterson, N. J., on Sept. 2d, and perform at Harlem, N. Y., on the 4th. An end man and general comedian are wanted to complete the company. Apply as directed in the advertisement.

FOUR singers are wanted for Dan Bryant's Minstrels. Musicians are also wanted. See advertisement.

CARD.—BALTIMORE, Md., Aug. 16th, 1871.—EDITOR N. Y. CLIPPER.—DEAR SIR.—I have before me a copy of your paper of the present week, and see therein an assertion that "no company, however talented, can run a successful season in London or the provinces without affixing this magic talisman, Christy, to their organization." This statement is disproved by the fact that the Great American Slave Troupe, now at Liverpool, is as highly favored by the English public as the London Christys are; and such is its success that the name of the troupe has been legally registered to prevent other companies from adopting it, which trick has been several times attempted. The Slave Troupe's run at Liverpool is unprecedented out of the metropolis itself. READER.

DAN BRYANT'S MINSTRELS performed in Rochester, N. Y., August 17th, and Buffalo, 18th and 19th.

DUPREZ AND BENEDICT'S MINSTRELS are billed to perform at East Saginaw, Mich., August 28th and 29th.

CAL. WAGNER'S MINSTRELS are billed to perform at Austin, Minn., August 21st.

HART, RYMAN AND BARNEY'S MINSTRELS are billed to perform at Evansville, Ind., August 23d and 24d; Terre Haute, 24th, and Indianapolis, 25th and 26th.

THE NEW YORK FEMALE MINSTRELS performed in Oil City, Pa., August 17th, and Titusville, 18th and 19th.

CHARLEY MARTINE'S OCCIDENTAL MINSTRELS are billed to perform at Newcastle, Indiana, August 22d to 26th; Knightstown, 29th to Sept. 1st; Connersville, 5th to 8th; Rushville, 12th to 15th; Greensburg, 20th to 24th, and Edenburg, 26th to 30th, in all of which places fairs are to be held. At the latter he closes his season and joins Dr. Ed. Backenstoe's Circus as clown, starting south early in October.

MRS. RENTZ'S FEMALE MINSTRELS performed at River John, N. S., August 12th; Tatmagouche, 14th; Wallace, 15 h; Pugwash, 16th; Amherst, 17th; Moncton, N. B., 19th. Their season will close at Eastport, Me., on the 26th, when the company return to Boston to re-organize, and after a vacation of three weeks start again on a tour.

NED TURNER advertises that he can be engaged as end man or for double acts.

A BANJOIST, who can play bones, is wanted by Sam. S. Sanford, who opens his opera house, at Philadelphia, Pa., on Aug. 26th.

ROLLIN HOWARD warns all persons, through a card elsewhere, from infringing on his rights, or using any of his negro acts or specialties, which are copyrighted. He writes new songs, &c., to order.

HORACE F. RICHOLS, of present traveling with Van Amburgh & Co's Circus, can be engaged after Nov. 10th. His address is care of this office.

HARVEY ROBERTS, comic vocalist and mimic, late of O'Brien's Circus, wishes us to state that he was struck upon the head at Cooperstown, N. Y., by some person unknown, which has caused him to permanently lose his hearing. He desires to let his friends know that in consequence thereof he has retired from the profession, and has made his home in Albany, N. Y., where his friends recently gave him a benefit and presented him, he states, with $1,600.

JAMES ROBINSON'S CIRCUS performed in Baltimore, Md., during the entire past week.

P. E. WARNER'S CIRCUS is billed to perform at Bay City, Mich., August 21st, and East Saginaw 22d.

SIGNOR FARRANTI, contortionist, and Miss Lizzie Steadman, both of Bailey & Co.'s Circus, were married at Goderich, Canada, August 10th.

THE NEW AND PRINCIPAL ATTRACTIONS at Burnell's Pittsburgh, Pa., Museum are the Oriental giant and Sam Weller, conjurer. The giant, of course, is a "big" curiosity, and is a pleasing investment. Weller's illusions and diabolisms are very cleverly presented. Prof. Worth and his curiosities are still at this establishment. Major Burnell has recently made a number of improvements in his museum, prominent among which is a fountain of peculiar construction and beautiful ornamentation. Various other changes are in contemplation, which will be effected within a short time.

PHILHARMONIC HALL, Louisville, Ky., is furnished with a stage, scenery and other conveniences and can be rented through Jno. M. Boggs, the agent.

ULMAN'S OPERA HOUSE, Williamsport, Pa., has a seating capacity of fifteen hundred, and is advertised to rent.

A SIDE SHOW OUTFIT is advertised for sale by Mac., in another column.

PROF. STARR, fire king, magician &c., advertises for an engagement.

AT SIMPSON'S NEW AMERICAN MUSEUM, Philadelphia, the performances in the lecture room consisted of the magical feats of Sig. Fernando, the comic singing of Mr. F. A. Conley, and the feats of a very well trained troupe of dogs. The mammoth baby was the principal attraction among the curiosities to be seen here. This week Alf Burnell, the mimic, Miss Helen Nye and Mr. James W. Sharpley, will commence an engagement here, opening on the 21st inst. The regular dramatic season will open on the 2d of September.

ALYN HALL, Hartford, Conn., is advertised to let to first class entertainments. It is furnished with a stage, scenery, &c., and will seat fourteen hundred persons.

THE HOWARD COMBINATION is the title of a new association just formed in Buffalo, N. Y., with the following gentlemen as officers:—Eugene Howard, President and manager; James Fox, stage manager, and Augustus Fox, treasurer.

FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

Dramatic.

OUR ADVICES FROM LONDON, ENG., which are up to August 5th, give intelligence that the season at the West End theatres is rapidly drawing to a close, and that in the provincial towns there is but little doing. Walter Montgomery's season at the Gaiety commenced auspiciously so far as the attendance was concerned. "Hamlet" was the opening play. The scenery and appointments were bad, and an apologetic card therefor was published upon the programmes. The acting, as a whole, was pronounced fair, though many of the actors did not find themselves adapted to the characters they essayed. Mr. Montgomery's impersonation of Hamlet was closely criticised, and although it was admitted that he played the character much better than before he left England, still it was not a great piece of acting. The new readings of the text made by him did not seem to have met with approval. It would appear from rumor that Mrs. John Wood was not to be the lessee and manageress of the St. James Theatre during the approaching season. We published a recent issue the report of an English operatic season to commence there in September, and the Orchestra states that "M. Felix has taken the St. James Theatre, and opens it in November, for nine months." .....At the Royalty, Mr. Katon closed his season in August, on the 7th, Mr. Wood acting and stage manager, was to have taken a benefit with the following programme:—The burlesque of "Nobody's Child," "Guy Manner," and a portion of the Alhambra company in the "Waterman." ....Mr. J. S. Clarke's performances of Dr. Pangloss in the "Heir at Law," at the Strand, are favorably reviewed. At the end of every act he collapsed a well-deserved recall."..... There had been no change at the Haymarket. Princess', Adelphi Olympic, Vaudeville, or Queen's.....The Prince of Wales was to have been closed for the season on August 11th, when "Ours" would have reached the 112th performance of its revival. .....At the Alfred, "Dead Man's Point" was produced on August 5th.....At the Alhambra, on August 7th, were to have been produced a new and original musical extravaganza entitled "About the Battle of Dorking; or, My Grandmother," written by F. C. Burnand and Arthur Sketchley, and a new musical sketch, by F. B. Johnstone, entitled the "Burgomaster's Daughter".....The Charing Cross Theatre was to have been opened on August 14th, under the management of Edward Hastings with the following programme:—A new farce by J. Strachan, entitled "Our War Correspondent;" a drama entitled "Shadows," by Charles L. Young, Bart., and a comedietta "My Villa in Italy." There were underlined for early production a new and entirely original comedy, entitled "Pique," by Theodore A. Sharpe; Sir Chas Young's comedy-drama entitled "Mona," and a new extravaganza, entitled "Crichton," by Robert Hartley Edgar.....At the Britannia, among other entertainments an entirely new drama, entitled the "Lost Wife; or, The Husband's Confession," was to have been produced on August 7th. ..... At the Eyre London, "Across the Continent" was produced August 8th, with T. W. Keene and W. B. Cahill in leading characters, while Dan Lesson played the negro, Cæsar Augustus.....The Lyceum is undergoing considerable alteration, and being re-decorated prior to being opened in September under the management of H. L. Bateman.....Drury Lane is announced to be re-opened under the management of F. B. Chatterton, on September 23d, with Andrew Halliday's drama, entitled "Rebecca," founded upon Sir Walter Scott's novel of "Ivanhoe".....The Opera Comique Theatre was to have been opened August 19th under the management of Edward Harris, for the production of Molière's comedies in English, operettas and ballets.

JOHN DOUGLASS, the lessee of the Standard Theatre, on leaving the theatre, recently, slipped upon the stone staircase and fell some distance, receiving a wound upon his head and a severe shock to his system.

THE ZAVISTOWSKI SISTERS are noticed as follows by a Sidney, Australia, paper, which has recently been received:—"The Prince of Wales Opera House, a theatre solely devoted to the boon, for many years, a favorite form of public amusement in England, and has become so more recently in America. It has also its votaries amongst a large section of Australian playgoers, and the recent engagements we have had of leading artists of the English artist was during Lady Don's visit to these colonies, which proved so remunerative that it is not surprising that Mr. Cooper, with his usual business ability, took the earliest opportunity to secure the services of other stars in that line. These are the sisters Zavistowski, who arrived here recently after a tour through America, where the press has accorded them the highest position in their profession. On Saturday night they made their first appearance before the Sydney public, at the Prince of Wales Opera House, and had a highly flattering welcome. The burlesque selected for the occasion is founded on the well known mythological story of Orion, in which the Misses Zavistowski sustained the rôle of the Twins, personating the Castor and Pollux of Jupiter and Leda, Mercury. Their personal appearances, their brilliant setting, singing and dancing took the house by storm, and there seemed to be but one opinion, which was that the ballet troupe had no rivals in Australia. Bonfire of the most enthusiastic character frequently interrupted the action of the piece, and numerous bouquets were showered upon the stage from the occupants of the dress circle. The Misses Zavistowski, Alice introduced some graceful dances, and the piece was interspersed with telling allusions to political matters."

HENRY FARON SAVILLE died at Barnes, Eng., July 28th, of acute inflammation of the liver, at the age of twenty-six years. He was the son of the late Henry Saville, a popular actor in his day at the Adelphi and Surrey theatres, a nephew of Miss Helen Faucit, and closely related to the well known theatrical family of the Keans. He was associated from infancy with the actor's art, and at a very early age began to show a predilection for the art which his parents adorned. Lobster frisk obtained under an affection which exhausted him from an early age of thirteen. He was possessed of writing cacoethes which were produced with no small success at the minor London theatres. His later works were more ambitious and gave evidence of power and skill which needed only a riper experience to have given him a permanent place among British dramatic authors. He left a second wife, two infant children and a widowed mother to mourn their loss. He was buried at Norwood by the grave of his father, on August 3d.

R. SHERRIDGE will once more become the lessee of his old quarters, the Surrey Theatre, London, Eng., which he will re-open after some alterations and improvements have been made, early in October.

MISS BATEMAN was to have commenced a provincial tour at Bristol, Eng., August 14th, where she will play six nights.

MISS EMILY TOWN and the St. James Company were to have commenced a provincial tour by playing six nights at Portsmouth, Eng., previous to forsaken six nights, commencing the 14th; thence to Liverpool on the 21st, remaining twelve nights.....Mr. J. S. Clarke was to have commenced a fifty weeks' engagement at Dublin, Ireland, on August 7th.

MISS ADA MAYSON, professionally known as Miss Ada Middleton, late manageress of the Theatre Royal, Gravesend, and W. H. Allen Thomas were married on July 27th.

THE SALE.....on July 27th, at the Theatre Royal, Greenock, Scotland, under the management of Alexander Wright, was to have commenced on August 11th, with "Lost Esther."

MISS CATHERINE LUCETTE and Morton Price were playing at Leeds, Eng.

Musical.

THE SEASON AT HER MAJESTY'S OPERA, Drury Lane, London, Eng., closed with the performances of Aug. 5th. "Anna Bolena" was performed on the 1st, 3d and 5th.

HENRY RAMER'S ENGLISH OPERA COMPANY were performing at Leeds, Eng., on our latest advices.

IMBOSEN DE SOLLA'S LONDON OPERA COMPANY were to have commenced an engagement of twelve nights duration, at Plymouth, Eng., on Aug.

ACCEPT ENGAGEMENTS,

IN NEW YORK ONLY,

On her Arrival.

"THEATRE ROYAL, Dublin.—In 'Little Em'ly' the heroine is most adequately represented by Miss Lizzie Willmore. She performs the character in an earnest, unassuming manner, eminently suited to the character. Miss Willmore's acting as Annette might well be proud of."—The Era.

"THEATRE ROYAL, Dublin.—Miss Lizzie Willmore as Little Em'ly has a character of intrinsic interest, which she heightens by her art. Her acting throughout was finished perfection."—Morning Post.

"THEATRE ROYAL, Dublin.—A happier or more fitting representative of Little Em'ly we can hardly fancy than Miss Lizzie Willmore. She looked the part thereof and acted it, as it ought to be, with perfect sympathy."—The Era.

"THEATRE ROYAL, Birmingham.—Miss Lizzie Willmore was extremely pleasing, and, at times, very pathetic in 'Nell,' and in the dying scene she reached a high point of excellence."—Newcastle Daily Chronicle.

"THEATRE ROYAL, Glasgow.—Hitherto the part of 'Little Nell' has been marred by not being able to get a lady that could both look and act the part. Miss Lizzie Willmore possesses this rare combination. Her performance of the part was, in every respect, such as to have gratified her into the good graces of a crowded audience."—North British Daily Mail.

"THEATRE ROYAL, Liverpool.—In the representation of 'Nell,' Miss Lizzie Willmore created a strong feeling in her favor. This gentlemen of the character she is called upon to portray requires an actress of a high order of abilities. Miss Willmore has evidently studied her part well, and goes with an earnestness that is refreshing to reality."—Sunday Courier. 31-34*
